Read the new advertisement of Crandall & Brainard, and you will observe that there has been another grand downfall in prices at their store. OUR TOWN MEETING.—For some time previous to our town meeting, a certain few from both parties, seemed determined to force upon the Republican party the issue of "License or no license," and in their direction labored faithfully, thinking, undoubtedly that what they might draw from the Republican party with what they would hold in the Democratic ranks would be sufficient to carry the day. But the Republicans as a party refused to accept this as an issue, and was so decided at one of their primary meetings, But the dissatisfied faction still persisting, made a call for a "Union Caucus" for Monday night last—the same time that the Republicans had called theirs. And some of the Democrats desirous of retaining their organization also made a call for a Democratic, but it was understood by some who signed the call to be a "feint" and so it proved in the end.

The republicans assembled in caucus pursuant to call, and went to work in perfect harmony, and with the best interest of the town at heart; throwing aside the item of license or no license, and made a straight Republican ticket.

The Union caucus met at the time and place specified in their call, and by chance we dropped in. In the centre of the room upon a platform was William Trip, delivering a temperance lecture, and we thought him a fair subject too, but unfortunately for the boys had let him alone, the listeners might have been able to hear a little better, but fun seemed to be the order of the day. Soon however, the caucus was called to order, and a committee announced through their chairman that they had made up a ticket, and read it over; then some one moved that the ticket as read by the chairman be declared unanimously nominated, and it was called. The ticket consisted five Republicans and the balance were Democrats. These were all understood to be men in favor of license.

The Democratic caucus we did not see, as no ticket was in the field, we suppose that they concluded to lay quiet.

Here ended the work until Tuesday morning, when both parties appeared upon the battle field well armed with ballots, and some with a large amount of "grass." The Union ticket (only one student of "science" for with John Prest at the head of the ticket, Comer a Republican, and Gen. Wilkie to lead them, they had the id a that every body in Andover, and some others, was a going to follow them; but the everybodys couldn't see them, and when night came and the ballots had been counted they were not long in forming the opinion that somebody had lied to them, and that they didn't run the whole of Andover. The Republican ticket was elected in full with a majority ranging from thirty to fifty-nine.

As a general thing our best citizens are opposed to bringing the temperance question into the political parties and they were determined that the few who had undertaken to run the Republican party in that direction should be checked, in a standstill at once and they were. If the license question is to be decided by a vote, let it be done at a special election independent of party, and are in hopes that this will be the way in which it will be settled.

Alfred, March 1st, 1870.

Orange county girls are slandered after the following manner by a paper published in an adjoining county:—Since the story has been told how Judge Breckinridge married a country girl that he saw jump over a rail fence with a pail on her head, it is said that out in Orange county, all the young women are putting water pails on their heads and jumping rail fences from morning till night. As soon as they see a carriage coming along the road with a man in, they snatch their pail and go for the fence."—Elmira Advertiser.

Messrs. Editors—Allow us to mention the good time which was enjoyed by the Good Templars, we must say the victory won on the same day to their encouragement, was received by them with no little enthusiasm, but joy filled the hearts of all present, To Mr Everetts we return our thanks for opening his rooms for the evenings entertainment the receipts of which was $7.—making an aggregate of about $34 towards furnishing their hall with a good carpet, contributors from the friends of temperance, will be thankfully received. Any one wishing to donate for said purpose will be duly rewarded.

Wednesday evening we had the privilege and pleasure of listening to J. E. Chapin, who delivered a temperance address at the Baptist Church to a most brilliant audience it was, and all present were highly entertained. At the close he illustrated from canvass the Black Valley Railroad, impressing upon the minds of the young deeply, the great danger resulting from the first steps of intemperance. Without we pronounce the lecture a successful the temperance cause will go on.

GOOD TEMPLAR.

"TAKE IT AWAY."—In one of the finest houses in the quiet, peaceable and moral village of Horseheads, reside a gentleman and his wife who have lived happily and harmoniously together for something more than fifteen years past, in the enjoyment of all the comforts of life, except the happiness of witnessing the innocent mirth of their own child on. A few nights since the slumbers of this couple were disturbed at a late hour by what sounded to them like the wailings of an infant upon their door steps.—The wife shouted at once:—Take it away;" "don't leave any of your brats on our door steps," "we won't have it here, but will to the poor house;"—Husband, get up at once and drive them away." The husband being thus appealed to, arose and hastily made his way to the window, and casting his eyes in the direction from whence the sound proceeded, beheld what he supposed to be the moving, squirming form of an infant. It was his time to cry aloud, and he did so most lustily, entreating those who had left the innocent child there to come and take it away, assuring whoever it might be that he and his wife did not want any children, and that they would not keep it. The noise made by the husband in opening the window, and in his shouting, frightened the cats who were "quietly" sparling on his door-steps, and they silently glided away in the darkness, and there was no form of an infant seen or voice of an infant heard thereafter about the house.—The story however got out, and all that is now necessary to do to compel the husband or wife to ask for quarter is to say "take it away!"—Elmira Advertiser.

"FIAT JUSTITIA."—The editor of the Angelica Reporter, has "been and gone and went and done it," he has. In the plentitude of his wisdom, he has drawn a conclusion. It is this, that your regular contributor, Aquidneck, is a woman. With all due deference to the gentleman's superior wisdom, I plead "not guilty." To steal from the immortal Artemus Ward a few words, "if I have been of Jan. 6.) Did he ever see a woman as a scholar, in a school formed entirely of boys? And finally, did he ever know a woman to write twenty columns for a newspaper, without writing a love story? I never wore crinoline, never sported a chignon, never was afflicted with the Grecian Bend, never "refused three good offers," never swept the sidewalks of Andover (which sidewalks, a regard for truth compels me to say, are all too few, and rather narrow) with a trail, never was lost in the labyrinthian maze, of millinery or dressmaking, and never wrote for the "Revolution."

I have my weaknesses, a lover of meerschaum pipes and "Lynchburg" smoking tobacco, frequent quotations, and parenthetical sentences, among them, but to the charge of feminity, I am not open.

AQUIDNECK.

Written for the Andover Advertiser.

Recollect one of My School Boy Days

BY AQUIDNECK.

Spring came with its balmy breezes, its birds and flowers. We had no grand old woods to roam in, and so we made the best of the trees in the public parks. In the absence of wood and field flowers, we adorned our button holes with the bright golden blossom of the dandelion, which struggled for existence among the pavements.—Sometimes a dose would be ornamented with a bunch of lilac, taken by some bold raider without the fear of the municipal police before his eyes, from somebody's front yard. Occasionally, our boys in large parties made excursions into the country, with guns and fishing tackle, and one Friday morning twenty or thirty of us were seated around an apple tree in the school house yard planning an expedition to the 'Glen' on the following day. Harry Vernon was to make one of our number. 'A bit of genuine out door sunshine, and a dinner of broiled trutta, will do you all sorts of good, Harry, don't fail to be on hand early.'

'We shall doubtless be very happy. The Glen is a beautiful place, and so is Oakland, with its evergreen walks, and its memories of Dr. Channing. I will go boys.'

How long the forenoon seemed, it was so hard to be confined to the schoolroom, when everything was so bright and beautiful outside. The robins in the apple trees would not let us study. Oh! how slow the hands of that old clock did move.

As I have said it was Friday, and declamation day as we called it.—Some half a dozen boys had spoken and Harry was called. He was one of our best speakers and we were very proud of him. He had chosen for recitation, Bishop Berkley's beautiful poem on 'The Destiny of America,' and we knew his ability to do it justice. As he ascended the platform he fell heavily to the floor. Mr. S. and his assistants, hastened to him supposing childless as did the scholars, that he had fainted, but when we saw the look of agony on the faces of our teachers' when we saw the principal tear open his jacket, and place his hand on his heart, then a whisper to Mr. P., we realized that he was dead. Yes! he whom we had loved [illegible] had passed away from the [illegible] of earth life, to the city that hath no foundation, whose builder and maker is God.'

The scene that followed is not in my power to describe.

"As when a tempest rises howling to and fro,
And pacifies by force, and troubling of the waters
As I have said, all pale."

I question if a sudden scene was ever witnessed in a school room. A physician was called, but the vital spark was extinguished, and after appropriate remarks by Mr S, we were dismissed, and left the schoolroom, soon to be occupied by a coroners jury.

On Sunday we assembled at the house of mourning, our teachers were all there, and I do not think ten of our boys were absent. I believe there was more real sorrow felt by us who followed Harry Vernon's lifeless clay from the cottage to the church, and from the church to the graveyard, than was felt at the great funeral of George Peabody, in which the representatives of two nations participated. Our love for him had been 'passing the love of woman' and we wept in true sorrow of heart, when the earth clods fell upon his coffin. From the widowed and childless Mrs. Vernon, a few weeks later, we begged and received the privilege of erecting a monument to his memory.

By the side of an unassuming slab of marble which marks the final resting place of George Vernon, stands a granite obelisk broken at the apex On a marble slab in the face of it, is this simple inscription.

HARRY.

"Whom the Gods love, die young."

It was Wyman's idea, this broken pillar, and these few words, "We need not memorize his virtues on monumental marble" said he "let us avoid that which is too often mockery and falsehood. We know his virtues." [illegible]
