BRADLEY MURDER TRIAL.

Defendant Related on Stand Details of Her Intimacy With Brown.

Washington, Nov. 20.—"I am so tired," said Mrs. Annie M. Bradley, the defendant in the trial now in progress in the criminal court in this city, after she had spent about four hours on the witness stand relating the details of her acquaintanceship and intimacy with former United States Senator Brown, with whose murder she stands accused, and Judge Stafford immediately gave orders for the adjournment of the court.

She had not reached the events directly connected with the tragedy in which Brown was killed, but had very closely approached them.

The story dealt with the first acquaintance of Mrs. Bradley with Brown and told how that acquaintance gradually ripened into friendship and finally into love. It was a long and pathetic narrative of illicit affection; of promises of marriage which could at first be made only on the condition of divorce on both sides, and then of disappointment and grief when both became free and could have been legally united if Brown had been willing.

Mrs. Bradley gave the particulars of many pledges made to her, told how Brown had introduced her as his wife, and how he had given his name to one of their children, and also of how he had aided her in no less than three criminal operations.

She related many pleasant incidents of their life together. She wore a smile when she spoke of her pride in his intellectual attainments and told of their reading together the principal poets. She said that he told her over and over again that she was the only woman he had ever loved, and averred that by his manner toward her and his superior attainments he had gained a complete mastery over her.

The court room was crowded and many of the spectators were women. Tears were frequently shed not only by the general audience but once or twice by members of the jury. Mrs. Bradley was quite emotional and her voice was scarcely audible at times. Her attorneys expressed confidence after the witness left the stand that she would be able to proceed to the end without a breakdown. Mrs. Bradley said her health had failed during her association with Brown, and she told of one occasion when she was tempted to commit suicide.

DEEP WATERWAY ALONG THE COAST.

Object of Commission Meeting In Philadelphia.

DELEGATES FROM ALL STATES

Senator Newlands Gave an Outline of Work of National Waterways Commission and Said the Atlantic Coast Would Be Given Early Attention. Railroad Opposition Discussed.

Philadelphia, Nov. 20.—The Atlantic Deep Waterway commission, having for its object a system of deep waterways along the Atlantic coast, and also the furtherance of a project for a continuous inland water route from the Carolinas to Boston, began its session at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel here. Delegates numbered more than 500 from all parts of the country and were appointed either by the governors of their respective states or by commercial bodies.

The general trend of the addresses was a need for the development of the waterways not only along the Atlantic coast but throughout the country. None of the speakers antagonized the railroads, but those who touched on railroad opposition said that the volume of freight traffic in the country was great enough to give the railroads a profitable income after the waterways receive their share of the traffic.

The principal speaker was United States Senator Newlands of Nevada, who gave an outline of the work of the National Waterways commission, and promised that the waterways along the Atlantic coast would be given early attention by that body. All inland water systems, the senator said, should be controlled by the federal government. He was not opposed, he said, to private capital building canals, but the government should be in position to take them over at fair compensation in case the government wants them.

Congressman H. H. Bingham of this city presided at the morning session. Those who spoke included Senator Newlands, William Barclay Parsons of New York, Congressman J. A. Goulden of New York and William B. Jones of the Chamber of Commerce of Albany, N. Y.

Congressman J. Van Vechten Olcott of New York presided at the afternoon session. Congressman G. E. Waldo of New York was one of the speakers.

Before adjournment for the day a committee was appointed which probably will draft resolutions asking congress to make surveys and otherwise give impetus to the movement.

Driven to Suicide by Worry.

Rockford, Ill., Nov. 20.—Oscar Nelson, a well-to-do hardware merchant, committed suicide by inhaling gas because of continued worry over the financial stringency. Nelson was a man of considerable means, but his financial depression worried him greatly, and for the past two weeks he had talked of it continually. The suicide of President Barney of the Knickerbocker Trust company of New York depressed Mr. Nelson and is believed to have prompted him to end his life. At church last Sunday Nelson, as he dropped a coin in the contribution box, remarked to his wife and daughter: "This is the last contribution from me."

President and Cashier Indicted.

Macon, Ga., Nov. 20.—J. W. Cabinish, president, and C. M. Orr, cashier of the defunct Exchange bank, were indicted by the grand jury on charges of embezzlement, felony and misdemeanor. President Cabinish is charged with embezzling $70,000 and Orr $90,000. The felony, according to the indictment, consists in having declared a dividend when the earnings of the bank did not warrant it, and the misdemeanor in borrowing $40,000 jointly without the consent of the directors. Neither President Cabinish nor Cashier Orr have been arrested yet.

British-German-French Entente.

Paris, Nov. 20.—In authoritative circles here little importance is attached to the current reports that King Edward and Emperor William during their meetings at Windsor castle discussed the basis of a British-German-French entente. Nevertheless it is considered likely that their interviews will make for better relations between the three countries.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(Special Correspondence.)

Not long ago on a "downpour" day Mr. Roosevelt struck out across country on foot. It was wet and black above and wet and black below, but these things are no bother seemingly to this outdoor executive. On his return he struck Sixteenth street and turned down for the White House. His broad brimmed soft hat was dripping water from its rim as the eaves of a barn shed water during a June thunderstorm. It was drip, drip, drip, from the tail of his coat, and every inch of the coat's cloth was oozing water. Below the waist line he was a mixture of moisture and mud, but he strode along sturdily, oblivious of everything but the fact that he was getting exercise, and with him when exercise is enjoyable black sky and blue sky, dry path and wet path, are as one.

The President's Caps.

President Roosevelt's distinguished looking military capa is one of the characteristic "clothes" in Washington. It is probably more familiar here than anything else the president wears, not excepting his conventional frock coat. Nothing is known outside of the capital about the military cape. It is seen only here.

According to tradition, it was made for the president when he was merely a lieutenant colonel of cavalry in the Spanish war. However, if this is true it is a high recommendation for the cape that it looks like new even now, and it has seen some hard service since the president has been at the helm of the nation.

A Napoleonic Garment.

No ordinary garment is the president's military cape, but an imposing, a formidable, an almost imperialistic piece of apparel. Designed on Napoleonic lines of architecture and constructed of impressive black cloth, its only touch of color is the royal purple lining, which flaps aside in the wind now and then with grand effect, giving to the whole an appearance of mingled royalty and democratic simplicity.

White House China.

Mrs. James A. Garfield, widow of the twentieth president of the United States, has given to the White House several pieces of china which were used by President and Mrs. Garfield long before they came to the White House. The gift consists of a large dessert bowl on a standard, a fruit compote and a dinner plate, each dish bearing a large letter G in old English script. The edging of each piece is of gold, with an inch wide mauve border, a scroll and leaf in gold and tracery running through the gold on the border. Bunches of bright colored autumn leaves and berries decorates the center of the compote.

Historic Building Razed.

The old Center house at the marine barracks is now being torn down to make way for more modern structures that will be used as quarters for the junior officers of the marine corps. This building, erected in 1802, of brick brought over from England, is a fair sample of the best style of architecture in vogue at that time, and within its confines have happened many interesting historic incidents.

Aaron Burr after killing Alexander Hamilton in a duel at Weehawken, N. J., in 1804 was brought to the marine barracks and occupied one of the rooms in the upper story of the Center house until paroled. Another prisoner of note who was kept at the Center house was Admiral Raphael Semmes of the Confederate navy. Lieutenant L. P. French, Sergeants Thomas Jones and Patrick Cassidy, acting under instructions from the navy department, arrested Admiral Semmes at Mobile, Ala., in December, 1865. He was brought to this city and imprisoned for three months in the Center house, after which he was released and allowed to return to his home in Alabama.

British Headquarters in 1814.

Several American women were also incarcerated in this old building when the British captured Washington in 1814. After routing the city's militia the English forces tore down on the marine barracks and caused Uncle Sam's nautical soldiers to evacuate their garrison. The British then established their headquarters at the Center house, and plans were at once formulated to burn the old capitol, the office of the secretary of state and the library of congress. The British sought in vain for the city's treasures and the military armament that they believed were hidden in or about the marine barracks, even causing the entire parade ground to be dug up and impaling every one whom they suspected of having knowledge of the whereabouts of the treasures they sought. They finally caused the arrest of three young American women—Rachel Steele, Mary Simonds and Polly Simonds—who were related to some of the noncommissioned officers of the United States marine corps stationed at the barracks previous to the British invasion. It was thought by the British that these women would be able to furnish information as to the hiding places of the treasures and give other information of value to them. After being imprisoned for four days they were allowed to return to their homes.

Pythian Ritual Written There.

Another incident of importance in connection with this old structure lies in the fact that the first ritual of the Knights of Pythias was formulated in the office rooms of the old Center house. In 1864 Justus Rathbone, Clarence Barton and Sergeant Major Edward Dunn gathered around the table of the sergeant major, and the Pythian ritual was drawn up, plans for organization completed and the necessary steps taken to launch a beneficial and fraternal order that now has a membership of more than 600,000.

CARL SCHOFIELD.

His Neighbor's Cat.

A Cleveland lawyer tells of a man living in a suburb of that city whose sleep had been disturbed nightly by the howling on his own back fence of his neighbor's cat. At last, in despair, he consulted his lawyer.

"There sits the cat every night on our fence," explained the unhappy man, "and he yowls and yowls and yowls. Now, I don't want to have any trouble with this neighbor, but the thing has gone far enough, and I want you to suggest a remedy."

The lawyer looked solemn and said not a word.

"I am well within my rights if I shoot the cat, am I not?" asked the sufferer.

"I would hardly say that," replied the legal light. "The cat does not belong to you, as I understand it."

"No."

"And the fence does?"

"Yes."

"Then," concluded the lawyer, "I think it safe to say that you have a perfect right to tear down the fence."—Lippincott's.

Weeds Worth Millions.

New Zealand flax is one of a number of wild weeds that yield their gatherers great wealth. The flax, the strongest known, grows wild in marshes. When it is cultivated it dwindles and its fibers become brittle and valueless.

Indian hemp grows wild, and out of it hasheesh, or keef, is made. Keef looks like flakes of chopped straw. It is smoked in a pipe; it is eaten on liver; it is drunk in water; it produces an intense, a delirious happiness, and among orientals it takes the place of beer and whisky.

The most valuable weed of all the wild growths is the seaweed. The nitrate beds of South America, which yield something like $65,000,000 a year, are nothing but beds of seaweed decomposed.—Columbus Dispatch.

Dog Pets in Hotels.

"The one thing we have more trouble with than anything else," said the manager of one of the large hotels in upper Broadway, "is the fact that women insist on smuggling their pet dogs to their rooms. We have no objections to dogs as dogs. If the animal is not too large or too fierce our guests may take them to their rooms during the day and may even feed them there. But we draw the line at having dogs in the bedrooms at night. Any woman with a pet dog can have the beast cared for by the porter at night, and we have specially constructed kennels for all kinds of dogs, and we give them the best of care. But owners of pets seem to think that no one save themselves understands Fido or Gyp. The women seem to think that if dogs are not in the counting assurance of the owner's nearness then doggie will not sleep well. So women try to smuggle their pets to their rooms under their cloaks or by back ways or even bribe one of the porters to take it to their room, believing that we will not hear anything about it.

"As a matter of fact, the first thing the porter does after getting his tip is to tip me, and a couple of hours later the woman is called upon by a clerk, who tells her dogs cannot stay in the bedrooms all night.—New York Press.

Nervous Indigestion

The action of digestion is controlled by nerves leading to the stomach. When they are weak, the stomach is deprived of its energy. It has no power to do its work. If you want permanent relief, you must restore this energy. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores nervous energy, and gives the organs power to perform their functions.

"For many years I was an acute sufferer from nervous indigestion; at times I was so desperate that I seemed almost a burden. I tried all kinds of remedies and various physicians with little or no relief, until one night last summer I saw Dr. Miles' Nervine and Heart Cure advertised. I resolved to make one more trial which I did in the purchase of one bottle of Nervine and one of Heart Cure. In a few days I began to feel better, which encouraged me so much that I continued the medicine until I had taken more than a dozen bottles. I am very much improved in every way; in body, mind and spirits since. I make a special point to recommend the medicine, and I feel a sincere pleasure in knowing that several persons have been benefited, through my recommendations."
