A Cabby Stung.

Foreigners often fall a prey to the unscrupulous wiles of the British cabby, who basely takes advantage of the stranger's want of familiarity with Cockdom's idiom, coinage, and locality. We have heard of the intelligent foreigner being driven about six statute miles in a journey from London bridge to Charing Cross. That cabby got the best of the transaction, but a recent attempt to impose upon foreign credulity was frustrated cleverly by a son of Cadmus who is caste for joking let him try to humbuggle a cabby into attempting it with him. He demanded in exceedingly broken English to be driven to a certain place, the fare to which was exactly a shilling. It may be remarked that he really could speak English as well as his cousin his cabby for tongue. On arriving at his destination he asked, still in a struggling fashion:

"How much have I to pay?"

"Two shillings," promptly responded the cabby.

"And how much is 5 shillings?" queried the traveler, hitting out three fingers and laying them across his palm.

"Then there's a bob," said the cabby, pocketing the coins.

"Very well," said the Frenchman. Then, dropping his accented broken English and assuming with the vernacular, "Well, here's a bob for you," he said and departed, leaving his erstwhile John Bull rather with a perplexed expression on his face. He took some time to disappear.—London Tit-Bits.

Rules For Right Eating.

The rules for eating, which ought to be a part of every child's A B C, are few and simple, though neglected by half of the adult population.—

1. Expressed in doctrine, they are:

Don't eat in a hurry; don't eat when tired; don't force it to chew well; don't drink much with meals—do it before—don't eat all one kind of food; don't take much cold food at one time.

Most of us live as if unconscious that there are such things as laws of health whose violation brings pain and sickness. The stomach will bear as much abuse and neglect as any organ of the body, perhaps more than most of them. But when it breaks there is usually one more cross dyspeptic inflicted on society and destined to spend the rest of his days alternating between a diet of soft eggs and toast and sundry concessions into mince pies, pork and cabbage and other things that he likes, but which make him miserable.—Charles H. Cochrane in Metropolitan Magazine.

He Hung on to the Record.

A fish story I heard while camping involves an old man who had little regard for the truth. Two young men made it up to go to the old gentleman's house and outgeneral him by telling the biggest lie to the old man, who held the record. After being at the old man's house some time one of them asked the old gentleman if he had heard about the big fire. He said he had nor and asked them where it was. The young man told him a gasoline launch had exploded on the river and the whole river was on fire. The old man sat quiet for a moment, then turned to his wife and said, "Mother, I told you something terrible had happened up the river today when I caught that catfish with his fins all burned off."—Chicago Tribune.

A Hot Knife.

"A knife that cuts butter when it is hot" tind under no other circumstances) we sometimes meet with, and the reason of this is easily explained. Heat expands metal and in proportion to the amount of metal which is heated. There is more metal in the breadth of a blade than in its thickness, and the former therefore is expanded immensely more than the latter. In other words, the wedgelike shape is lengthened, and the tool becomes "sharp."

Heart Strength

Heart strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more, positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, to itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds, it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strongthen those nerves—restablish them as needed, with

PARCELS POST PROSPECTS.

Effect of Proposed Innovation on Mail Order Business.

According to a staff correspondent of the New York Globe, Postmaster General Meyer intends next winter to propose to congress the establishment of a parcels post system such as obtains in England. This innovation has been advocated by many persons for years, but it has been defeated by the hostility of the express companies represented in the congress particularly in the senate. There is now said to be considerable opposition on account of the fear that the establishment of this service, whereby parcels weighing several pounds are to be sent through the mails at a nominal rate, will injure local merchants because of mail-bag mail order trade in general.

In this point the Globe's Washington correspondent says:

"When the time comes Postmaster General Meyer, with the backing of the president, is expected to come out with arguments intended to refute the idea that the small storekeeper would be hurt by a parcels post. Officials who have looked into the matter say that the parcels post would help the small dealer instead of hurting him, and that instead of being compelled to keep stocks of certain goods he would act as an agent for big houses on commission, obtaining his goods quickly and at low transportation cost by mail. Of course, the examples set by foreign countries will be cited. It will be pointed out, undoubtedly, that nearly every other civilized country has better facilities for carrying parcels by mail than this country.

As is well known, one can mail an eleven pound package and send it through the mail to almost any place outside the United States and Possessions. The parcels post in the English parcels post system affords arguments which is exceedingly likely the post-office department will avail itself of. There one can send a parcel weighing up to five pounds for 12 cents, and the limit is eleven pounds and the charge 22 cents. The latest report on the subject shows that the last government year the people of England sent 101,000,000 parcels through the mails, an increase of 4.6 per cent. Moreover, this was not done at a loss, the profit of the English postal system being $20,000,000 the last government year, in contrast with a deficit in this country.

VALUE OF STREET TREES.

Nothing Adds So Much to a Town's Beauty.

There is a pleasing unanimity of opinion among writers and lecturers on street trees regarding their value to abutting property as well as to the community in general. Professor G. L. Stone, botanist at the Massachusetts Agricultural college, in a lecture before the Worcester County Horticultural society opened with the following appreciative words:

"There is nothing which adds so much to the beauty of a town or city as shade trees, and persons of good taste appreciate this fact. One will notice in passing that the villages adorned with a large number of beautiful shade trees are those in which have existed for some time considerable public spirit, refinement and culture. On the other hand, mill towns whose inhabitants have no permanent homes are usually notable for their lack of trees and embellishments in general. Shade trees, however, possess another value, that of utility, and we wish to call attention to this feature because it is not generally appreciated and furthermore because it will appeal to the practical man, who is little in sympathy with the beautiful in any form. The decisions of courts in the United States have in more than one instance proved that trees possess a property value and in many cases from $50 to $200 or more has been awarded to the abutter for the destruction of a single tree. It makes little difference whether a tree is located on the street or on private land or whether it is set out by the town or city or by the abutter, since a tree in front of a piece of property adds value to it, and the abutter can claim damages for the destruction of such a tree. An elm tree eighteen to twenty inches in diameter, for example, may be worth $100 to $300, and one would experience little difficulty in obtaining recompense for its destruction."

WASHINGTON LETTER

(Special Correspondence.)

Mount Vernon has been written about by pretty nearly everybody who has seen the place. It hasn't fallen to the lot of everybody to see it in the fall, the most fitting time, a fitting resting ground for the first American.

It seldom falls to man's lot to see such heroic trees. There is a giant oak which stands sentinel over the first burial place of Washington. The body was removed from the base of the oak about seventy five years ago. It never should have been removed.

Tomb of Washington.

It is said that Washington selected the place where his body now lies and left instructions that one day the change of sepulcher should be made. The oak which guarded the first grave must have been standing for three centuries. The view from the place is inspiring enough to kindle the ecstasy of a dead man. The view from the new tomb is fine in its way, but it is as nothing to the grand sweep of river, hilltops and forest which moves away before the eye from the place where Washington slept for thirty years.

Noble Forest Trees.

Hundreds of visitors go to Mount Vernon daily. They peer into the tomb and then straightway go to the house. There is an interest, of course, which must attach to any of the belongings of Washington, but it seems to be a legitimate matter of regret that of the thousands who go to Mount Vernon the interest in the mirror which Washington used when he shaved and in the spoon with which he ate his porridge, if he ate porridge, is far greater than in the forest trees under which he walked and in the garden whose hedges of formal cut were planted with his own hand.

Indeed at Mount Vernon everything is dead; outdoors everything is alive. The forest trees, planted under direction with Washington. The contents of the house are as dust.

Library at Mount Vernon.

There is a real interest, however, in the library of the old home. In the main the books are simply copies of those which were on the shelves in Washington's time. The originals, it is said, are in several libraries of the country. There are two exceptions, however, which are open at the title page, so that if the light be good one may read Washington's name written in his own hand and the title of the book which he thought worthy enough to buy.

Statue of General Jackson.

In the very heart of Lafayette square stands the equestrian statue of General Jackson. Everybody knows that, even though everybody has not been to Washington, for it is a most pictural bit of art, if it be art, as there are some grave doubts on that score. The horse is rearing—rearing impossibly, and the riding general is sitting his horse gracefully when he ought to be doing his hardest to keep his seat in the saddle, for his mount apparently is doing his best to get rid of his rider burden.

Old Hickory in Bronze In New Orleans.

The only reason for bringing this old time figure of Old Hickory into print at this day is to call attention to the fact that, while the work is supposedly the contentment of the Jackson statue in Jackson square, New Orleans, there is one item of difference which perhaps most people do not notice.

When Don Dodge took command of the city of New Orleans after Farragut had forced the forts near the mouth of the Mississippi river he went into Jackson square and looked at the statue of Old Hickory. Butler then issued an order for an inscription to be cut into the base of the statue. So in a day or two these words of Old Hickory were cut into the stone: "The Union—it must and shall be preserved." There is no such inscription on the base of the counterpart statue in Washington.

The Supreme Court.

A peep into the supreme court chamber discloses nine men of dignified bearing sitting on a circular elevated platform behind a solid rail. Lower down in small space are several tables reserved for lawyers permitted to practice before this court. On the same level is a row of circular seats for spectators, and in niches behind these are marble busts of former chief justices.

Precisely at noon each week day except Saturday when the court is in session the members of the court, the chief justice at their head, with their black silk robes about them, march single file in solemn procession from the consultation room across the corridor, through the lobby of the court, to their places on the bench. The crier calls out the usual summons to attention and concludes with "God save the United States and this honorable body." From that moment the utmost formality prevails, but never a sign of pomp or splendor about the august body so eulogized by Gladstone and other European publicists.

Eminent Jurists.

Though jurists who reach the altitude of the United States supreme court are all conceded to be mental giants, there is great contrast in their physical size. Some, like Justices Peckham and McKenna, are below the average stature of man, while their colleagues, Justices White and Harlan, are as big physically as they are mentally. Judging by little acts of everyday life, the heart of each measures well up to the popular estimate of his brain, and there is plenty of human nature even under the judicial robe. The yearly salary of these men is only $12,500—less than many lawyers make on a single case.

CARL SCHOFIELD.

The Chinese Stand Alone.

That proverbial "of China" about which so much has been written is declared by a London Times correspondent to be a strictly self defense and self rule movement. Japan and the western foreigner are not in it nor behind it. To quote:

"China for the Chinese" is a cry which grows daily more lustered and may have far reaching and unforeseen results. The Chinese have always despised Europeans, though it is safe to feed them, and now that schools and newspapers are at work and increased knowledge only renders them more arrogant. The Boxer troubles, Russia's aggressions and the triumph of Japan all contributed to make the organization of their army more and more imperative, and it has shined in the progress in all directions which has been so marked during the last five years. Whether the reform or the reactionary party be in power at court, this well drilled, well-disciplined army now remains as a powerful model and nucleus for other provincial army corps and a source of national pride and patriotism.

The writer thinks that this "model" army which originated in the province of Chili will be duplicated in each of the twenty provinces of the empire. The result will be a natural army of patriots, not a swarm of professionals.

To quote further:

Travel where you will throughout China—everywhere in all the towns—are men and women dressed in uniform or semi-European clothing, each one imbued with patriotism and a determination to free China from foreign aggressors. I have myself seen the gods turned out of their temples, to be stored in the cellars beneath, their altars displaced with altars and pictures of Mahomedan chiefs hung in halls filled with classes hard at work acquiring western knowledge.

This awakening is of course indirectly due to foreign teaching, but the immediate initiative has been taken by Chinese. Times were telling against them. In another ten, fifteen years there will be grown men, in charge or directing the affairs of the nation, who, during all this time the system has been in force, have been taught, educated and more or less imbued with the Chinese idea. The Chinese will be a nation with a people, a government and a certain homogeneity, not yet very much lacking. The foreign traders are instinct with Washington. The contents of the house are as dust.

Majestic Webster.

Theodore Parker gave the following graphic description of Daniel Webster in the famous three hour sermon preached soon after Webster's death:

He was a man of large mold, a great body and a great brain. He seemed made to last a hundred years. These Socrates there has seldom been a head to match it, large save the sculpy features of Michael Angelo. Since Charlemagne I think there has not been such a great figure in all the Christian world. A large man, decorous in dress, dignified in deportment, he walked as if he felt his self a king. The coal heavers and porters of London looked on him as one of the great forces of the globe. They recognized a native king. In the senate of the United States he looked an emperor in that council. Even the majestic Calhoun seemed common compared with him. City looked vulgar and Van Buren but a fop. What a mouth he had! It was a Roman mouth, yet there was a sweet grandeur in the smile and a woman's softness when he would. What a lower it was! What eyes—like charcoal fires in the bottom of a deep, dark well. His face was rugged with volcanic fires—great passions and great thoughts. "Great from of Jove himself; only the Thor, to threaten and command."

Spasms
St. Vitus' Dance

Many persons who suffered untold agonies from epilepsy, fits, spasms, and St. Vitus' Dance are today well. The strengthening influence of Dr. Miles' Nervine upon the shattered nerves having restored them to perfect health.

"I endured agony that words cannot express from St. Vitus' dance, which followed a very severe spell of rheumatism. I doctored with a physician; but the more I took of his medicine, the worse I got. Miles' Anti-Convulsion saved me. After she had become almost heart-broken, as well as physically exhausted from constant care, by the advice of a neighbor she procured a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine. From the first dose to the last a continual change for the better was noticable, and when I had taken eleven bottles I was well, and in perfect health."

EDWARD D. REAM,
North Manchester, Indiana.

"Our little boy Harry, had spasms for three years, and although we doctored with many physicians, he continued to grow worse until he had ten spasms in one week. About that time our attention was called to Dr. Miles' Nervine. We began giving it to him. His improvement seemed slow, but when he had finished the fourth bottle the spasms had disappeared, and have not been seen now for years. We shall always recommend Dr. Miles' Nervine."

MRS. BELLE M. TINDALL,
Hastings, Mich.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails, he will refund your money.

Majestic Webster.

Theodore Parker gave the following graphic description of Daniel Webster in the famous three hour sermon preached soon after Webster's death:

He was a man of large mold, a great body and a great brain. He seemed made to last a hundred years. These Socrates there has seldom been a head to match it, large save the sculpy features of Michael Angelo. Since Charlemagne I think there has not been such a great figure in all the Christian world. A large man, decorous in dress, dignified in deportment, he walked as if he felt his self a king. The coal heavers and porters of London looked on him as one of the great forces of the globe. They recognized a native king. In the senate of the United States he looked an emperor in that council. Even the majestic Calhoun seemed common compared with him. City looked vulgar and Van Buren but a fop. What a mouth he had! It was a Roman mouth, yet there was a sweet grandeur in the smile and a woman's softness when he would. What a lower it was! What eyes—like charcoal fires in the bottom of a deep, dark well. His face was rugged with volcanic fires—great passions and great thoughts. "Great from of Jove himself; only the Thor, to threaten and command."

Tutt's Catarrh Tablets are being mailed out free on request, by Dr. Tutt, Troy, N. Y. These tests are proving to the people—without a penny's cost—the great value of this powerful prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Tutt's Catarrh Remedy. Sold by O. E. Vars.
