

Mr. William Orel, was arrested on Greenway street, and taken to the police office. He was found with a bag of coins, which were taken from him. It is supposed that the thieves thought the bag contained money. Five hundred dollars, belonging to Mr. D. E. Martin, president of the bank, were taken by the thieves. The burglars effected an entrance to the bank by cutting a hole through the floor. The police which they used was directly beneath the hole was made about thirty inches square, through which all the implements used were taken. The floor was light, and but the difficulty was experienced in cutting through it. The large desk was placed underneath the hole, and matting placed on top to deaden the sound of the falling plaster. After the floor had been cut through, the carpenter was in getting their implements into the room. While the burglars were at work in the basement, the windows were covered by several thicknesses of matting, deepened to deaden the sound. After they reached the banking room, the desks used by the clerks were dumped and put in front of the windows. The utmost caution and deliberation were used by the thieves. They were supplied with much part of which they left behind them, and various kinds of liquor.

Lynching Confidence Men in Missouri.
From the Kansas City (Mo.) Times we learn the following relative to the murder of a confidence man by a vigilance committee at Harlem a few nights since: "It appears that four men crossed over to Kansas City during the morning and went to the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad depot. Two of these men were noticed about 9 o'clock of that morning, taking a man up to the bridge to show him the light. The man was an old man, and being met by a third man who told that he was in the company of thieves. He became alarmed at this and hurriedly returned to Kansas City, leaving behind them Kelly and Howard. They remained until the evening train came in on the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad, in the meantime making the acquaintance of some emigrants who were waiting for friends on the train. They undertook to impose upon the emigrants by telling them they could wait across the bridge and save fifty cents each for ferrage. While leading them to the bridge they managed to get from them $400. In the morning, however, he fired this robbery, Howard and Kelly were written upon by two men and that unless they left immediately, they would be summarily dealt with. Kelly made no answer, but Howard is reported to have said to the men: "I have bluffed this town once, and by G-d, I can do it again. I will leave when it pleases me best." Howard and Kelly did not leave as ordered and, being unable to find lodgings in the town, they went aboard the ferry boat. Here the drama was enacted. About 9 o'clock eight men, armed and armed, came to the boat. Two remained on the high ground, and six went down the gangway to do the murder. One of the six who did all the talking, said to Kelly, "You were notified to leave Harlem this morning, and you have not done so. Your partner also received a similar notice." He deduced us, and swore he had bluffed the town once and could do it again. "We are here to prove to you that we are in earnest this time." Kelly at once commenced begging for his life most piteously, without much apparent effect until a federal officer on board said to the masked men that he knew Kelly, had served in the same company with him during the war, and that only since he had been in the West had he fallen into such bad company. If they would spare him, he, the soldier, would take him away from this part of the country. After they had sworn Kelly and the soldier to the strictest secrecy in regard to all they saw and heard, the masked men made them go to the rear of the boat while Howard was being disposed of. At this time one of the men on guard upon the shore came aboard with a heavy stone attached to a rope and commenced to fasten the rope about his neck. Howard sat upon his knees and begged miserably for his life, and for time, if that was refused him, to write to his friends. He was told that for him there was no mercy, and despite his frantic efforts, he was hurled to the water side of the boat, the stone thrown at him, and Howard immediately afterwards, he struggled desperately in the water, and rose once to the surface near the boat. One of the murderers then took deliberate aim him with a revolver, and fired. Howard sank the second time, and was seen no more. Immediately after the firing, eight men left the boat, and were soon lost in the darkness of the night. From the soldier and Kelly the citizens learned of the transactions on the boat, and whether Howard was drowned, or whether he was killed by the pistol ball, is not positively known as yet, nor can be until the body is found.

The Power of a Word.
A mother on the green hills of Vermont was holding by the right hand a sixteen years old, mad with love of the sea. And as she stood by the garden gate one morning she said: "Edward, they tell me—for I ever saw the ocean—that the great temptation of a seaman's life is drink. Promise me, before you quit your mother's bosom, that you will never drink." "And," said she, "as he told me the story," "I gave her promise, and I went the globe over, Calcutta and the Mediterranean, San Francisco and Cape Good Hope, the North Pole and the South. I saw them all in forty years, and I never saw a glass filled with sparkling liquor that my mother's form by the gate did not rise before me, and to-day I am innocent of the taste of liquor."

Was not that sweet evidence of the power of a single word? Yet that is not half. "For," said he, "yesterday there came into my counting room a man of forty years.
"Do you know me?"
"No!"
"Well," said he, "I was once brought back into your presence on shipboard; you were a passenger; they looked at me, and you took me to your berth and kept me there till I had slept off the excitement; you then asked if I had a mother. I said I had never known a word from her lips. You told me of your at the garden gate; and to-day I am master of one of the packets in New York; and I came to ask you to come and see me."

How far that little candle throws its beams! That mother's word in the green hills of Vermont! Oh! God be thanked for the mighty power of a single word.—Wendell Phillips.

Religion.
In our religious life we should fully give up to what we profess. Christianity can only appear in our every-day life. Truth and justice should be the foundation of our faith; and our life each day so guided that we may not ever be cause to repent of unworthy and sinful actions. To those who do right, penitence is unnecessary. We should judge the religious life of others by its severity; we can not know what gives power to them. It is not enough to give judgment. Be charitable always. It is one of the greatest duties of life. Deal gently with the reputation of our race. There are none without faults, and those alone are best who are less than others.

A writer in a newspaper says:—
"Woman is a fact." "Facts," says my Gamp, "are stubborn things, not to be grove."

An Ohio dutchman, in view of the very stringent law against profanity, very cautiously addressed a letter to his brother at Amsterd—
