"Alcoholism and Drug Habits:"

"There is no form of poisoning which is so wide spread and so rapidly increasing at the present time, as the series of toxic phenomena exhibited in the persons of those addicted to the excessive use of the various preparations of alcohol, opium, morphine, chloral, chloroform, ether, cocaine, and allied inebriating substances.

"There is no other kind of poisoning which so degrades brain structure and disturbs mental function, while physically degenerating bodily texture and undermining vital organs, or which is so far-reaching in its pernicious transmitting as it does through two generations a great variety of brain abnormalities, mental defects and moral obliquities originally induced in the ancestral stock by the toxicating action of the poison on brain and nerve tissue.

"The more generally employed among such articles, narcotics and an-aesthetics, by their characteristic influence, have the property of setting up and thus practically originating a desire for a fresh dose (drink), and at the same time of so disturbing brain-function as to induce moral perversion.

"Such substances are alcohol (in the form of beer, wine, brandy and whiskey), opium, morphine, cocaine, chloroform and the like, the first-named, alcohol, being a prolific inciter to breaches of human and divine law ranging from minor offenses to the gravest misdemeanors and crimes."

Till about a century ago, there was a general belief that drunkenness was a purely voluntary condition; that men and women could get drunk or refrain from getting drunk as they chose, and that intoxication was a pastime willingly and willfully indulged in; nor is this erroneous belief even now wholly dead. The many who formerly held and the comparatively few who still cherish this opinion looked upon the whole matter of drunkenness as a mere immorality, vice, or crime; punishment in a jail, confinement in the "stocks," pulpit denunciation, ecclesiastical excommunication, or the administration of a good whipping being in their view the proper mode of dealing with such wanton and depraved outcasts. Medical science has, therefore, set itself to investigate thoroughly the nature and properties of intoxication upon body and brain, and the various morbid conditions which operate to render a substantial proportion of human beings an easy prey to some form of that enslavement, by excessive indulgence in intoxicants, which is the most complete possession and tyranny endured by man.

This extract from the writings of a world-renowned specialist in the treatment of beer, wine and whisky inebri-ates, concludes the writer in Christian Herald, is surely enough to arouse every man, who desires the elevation of society, to war an everlasting warfare against the soul-and-body-destroying rum business.

THOUGHTS ON BUSINESS

BY

WALDO PONDRAY WARREN

THE CAREER OF A MAN

AN employer once said to an employe who wanted to leave him and take a better position with a rival house:

"It is too great a responsibility for me to influence the course of a man's career. I cannot allow my biased business interests to counsel you at this time. What you do at this point may affect your whole career. You are welcome to stay with us, and you are welcome to go—I won't urge or advise."

Not every employer would take that stand. Many would think so much of their own interests that they would talk a man out of taking advantage of the opportunity of his life. But nothing is gained by such methods. When the bird is really hatched it does no good to try to keep the shell around it.

Another employer, under similar circumstances, said: "If it were merely a matter of money, I would pay you as much as the other concern will; but I think there is a good future for you in that place, and I advise you to take it."

Another said: "I know of a good opening for a man like you. There isn't much ahead of you here, and while I should hate to lose you I can't refrain from telling you of such a good opportunity."

Perhaps the future will bring more of such friendly relations between employer and employe—a keen interest in the welfare of the individual worker aside from immediate business interest.

3 AY 3 HOME-MADE MIXTURE IS EASILY PREPARED, AND CURES WEAK KIDNEYS AND BLADDER

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authorit for kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almoc any case of kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease Its states that such symptoms as lam back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe.
Try it:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound syrup sarsaparilla, three ounces. Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here in town is authority that these ingredients are harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle.
This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire kidney and urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of Rheumatism in just a little while.
This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure the Rheumatism by forcing the kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause these afflictions. Try it if you aren't well.
Save the prescription.

He Knew Them.

This was overheard in the lobby of a big hotel in Cincinnati when a bus load of traveling salesmen came from the station. Every man of them as he signed the register responded to shouts from the hotel clerk—fatherly old fellow who had been there many years. "Ah," said one of them to the clerk, "it's a good thing you're still on deck, Uncle Dave. I don't think the home could run without you." "Couldn't it, though?" said Uncle Dave. "You fellows would come in here, and if there was a strange clerk, you'd say, 'Where's Uncle Dave?' And the clerk would say: 'Why, didn't you hear? He died a month ago.' And then you'd say: Well, I'll be darned! That's too bad. Say, when I'll dinner be ready?"

Dressing the Sponge.

When sponges are first torn from the sea bed they are of a dark color and living. By trampling and pressing them with feet a milky substance oozes out, which upon the sponge dies. They are then immersed in the sea for a space of time or ten hours. The dark, skinny substance is then removed by scraping, and gradually through cleaning, drying and bleaching, they take on the fine yellow color which characterizes many of them.

Little Teddy—Well, what becomes of them when there isn't any moon?

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

The Only Safe Rule for One to Follow for His Own Good.

IN THESE days of popular education and of wide spread agitation for civic betterment and the uplift of the lower classes, it is not surprising that the temperance question should have assumed a prominence never before reached in the United States. It is now generally recognized that the liquor traffic is responsible for a large percentage of the crimes, taxation, poverty and misery that afflict society. This being the case, it becomes the duty of all good citizens, says the Christian Herald, to promote temperance. Especially is it the duty of the Christian, by his own solicitude, to give an example of temperance to others.

Anachonis, the philosopher, who lived in an age when intemperance afflicted Greece, was asked by what means a man might best guard against the vice of drunkenness. "By bearing constantly in his view the loathsome, vicious behavior of the intemperate," was the reply. And surely we of this latter age do not lack for object-lessons when we look around us and see thousands of promising careers wrecked by drink, courts busied in the trial of crimes inspired by drink, and jails crowded with criminals chiefly the victims of drink.

John Wesley's inflexible attitude toward the drink habit was well known. A friend of his related that on one occasion at dinner Mr. Wesley saw him take a small portion of brandy. The great divine in surprise asked the reason and was told that it was for digestion. "Ah," observed Wesley, "you take a tablespoonful now; that will soon lose its effect and then you will take two; from two you will go to a glass and then to two glasses and so on, till in the end you may become a drunkard." He pleaded with him to stop it altogether, and the friend wisely heeded the warning.

An old man died not long ago in New England who was esteemed as a good citizen. But he had early contracted a fondness for ardent spirits, and drank freely and daily for days the greater part of his life. He gave a little to his children as they grouped around him; and they thought what their father loved must be harmless. But with their growing years a fondness for the stimulus increased, and this aged man lived to mourn the death of half his sons and 40 descendants who went down to the grave drunkards.

It has been said tersely that "the cup kills more than the cannon." Drink's death-roll of victims in the United States is estimated at 100,000 a year! All the wars of all the ages could hardly equal the cumulative slaughter by this monstrous vice.

The late Dr. Talmage emphasized very strongly the duty of parents in preaching total abstinence in the home: "Let your children grow up with an utter aversion to drink," he wrote. "Make it utterly nauseous. Teach them, as faithfully as you do the truths of the Bible, that rum is a fiend. Take them to the almshouse, and show them the wreck and ruin it works. Walk with them into the homes that have been scourged by it. If a drunkard hath fallen into a ditch, take them right up where they can see his face, bruised, savage and swollen, and say, 'Look, my son. Rum did that!' Looking out of your window at some one who, intoxicated to madness, goes through the street, brandishing his fist, blaspheming God; a howling defying, shouting, reeling, raving, and foaming maniac, say to your son, 'Look; that man was once a child like you.' And as you go by the grog-shop let them know that is the place where men are slain and their wives made paupers and their children slaves. Hold out to your children all warnings, all rewards, all counsels, lest in after days they break your heart."

The Missing Part.

Mrs. Boarder—How do you find the chicken soup, Mr. Boarder? Mr. Boarder—I have no difficulty in finding the soup, madam, but I am inclined to think the chicken will prove an alibi.

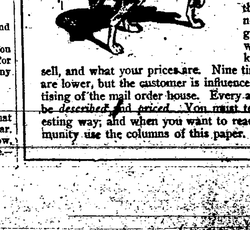
Don't Use a Scarecrow



To Drive Away the Mail Order Wolf

You can drive him out quickly if you use the mail order houses' own weapon—advertising. Mail order concerns are spending thousands of dollars every week in order to get trade from the home merchants. Do you think for a minute they would keep it up if they didn't get the business? Don't take it for granted that every one within a radius of 25 miles knows what you have to sell, and what your prices are. Nine times out of ten your prices are lower, but the customer is influenced by the up-to-date advertising of the mail order house. Every article you advertise should be described and priced. Hard to Believe.

A station master requested an increase of enlary and threatened to leave if he didn't get it.

The superintendent replied to his request by relating a story.

"When I was a young man," said he, "I once did as your are doing—I told the superintendent of the line I was then working on what you have told me. He refused my demand, and I left, and—would you believe it?—that railway line is running yet."—London Tit-Bits.

Not Encouraging.

A pastor in a rural church not far from Milwaukee announced the wedding in his church during the following week of two of his parishioners.

He followed the announcement with the title of the hymn which was then to be sung. It was "Mistaken Souls That Dream of Heaven!"—Milwaukee Free Press.

Seriously Injured.

On Saturday, Ezra Stephens was seriously injured in his back and on his head and shoulders, and is at present in a critical condition and unable to tell how he received his injuries.

It seems he was at his barn at dinne, and the last he remembers before the accident was putting the blanket on his horses.

There is some evidence that he fell while putting down hay for his stock, but he is unable to explain.

Dr. Conway has the injured man in charge and he is reported as getting along remarkably well.
