Breaks Stocking Records

Albany, April 27—The New York State Conservation Department's 20 fish hatcheries set a brand new stocking record during the fiscal year ending March 31. Statistics, released today, reveal that 378,580 pounds of fish were stocked, beating last year's mark by 17,036 pounds and more than doubling the mark set before the start of the hatchery enlargement program.

"There's one real discouraging angle," Mr. Duryea said. "We're losing every year, mainly thru erosion and silting, flooding and drying, more natural fish reproduction than the hatchery boys possibly can keep up with. If only ten percent of the fisherman would cut a couple dozen willow canes within the next three weeks and push them out of reach of cattle and well down in the moist earth along eroding, treeless stream banks, they might do more for their sport than our hatcheries can do in months."

This two-day school will be under the expert guidance of Ed Warner of Chicago, and Professor George Johnson, Sheep Expert from Cornell University. Applicants to this school will receive close instruction on the finer points of shearing and wool handling. We try to make them all Good Years!

This year the Erie is celebrating its 100th anniversary of the arrival of the first train which officially opened the railroad between Piermont, N. Y., on the Hudson River and Dunkirk, N. Y., on Lake Erie. The original New York and Erie Railroad was the first railroad to link the Great Lakes with the Sea!

We've been building and growing during these 100 years, always trying to do better year after year. The Erie has expanded with America, serving its many communities along 2200 miles of railroad between New York and Chicago. As the Erie has grown and prospered, so have the communities, each contributing to the well being of the other.

For instance, last year the Erie paid out over $77,000,000 in wages to Erie employees in this and other communities. In addition, the vast amount of supplies needed to run the railroad was purchased in many of these same communities, adding to local prosperity.

The fact that the Erie is a large taxpayer is important, too, for the schools and local government benefit by such taxes which are used for upkeep and improvements.

All this results from Erie's prime job of providing safe, dependable transportation—moving the products of industry by bringing in raw materials and shipping finished goods.

Erie's progressive railroading is a definite asset in serving your community—one of the reasons why we want to make every year a good year!
