CONSUMERS and Producers are words freely used by the economists when they want to designate those who make and those who use goods. In the light of frequent misunderstandings that creep into relations between these two groups, let's take a peak at what there words really mean. All of us are consumers. We use, or "consume", food, clothing and materials which go into providing shelter. From that point we branch out into sorts of manufactured goods and services according to our incomes, and often beyond. As such, we readily agree that how cheaply we can purchase all these things determines the amount and quality we are able to enjoy.

For the sake of argument we will asume that all of us are producers in one way or another, or have been. As the second Grange guidepost puts it: "the compensation of each should be based on what he contributes to the general welfare." All of us producers then, take the dollars we have earned at our labors, and, presto, in the twinkling of an eye, we are converted into "consumers". Now how do we act? As a producer, we are great believers in the Golden Rule. As a consumer, we think it,s a fine thing for the other fellow.

Few of us begrudge supporting the producer of the goods we buy, when we have to pay our taxes, his taxes and the taxes of everyone along the line, we begin to feel the pinch. We'd be further along the road to curbing inflation if this consumer-producer fellow: Joe American, John Q. Public, and Mr. Average Citizen, ganged up on the free-riders who are eating up our tax dollars.

Milk and related dairy products is New York's biggest farm business, and looms large alongside any other single industry we can name. National Dairy Month, noted each year at this time, winds up this week, and coinsides, this year, with centennial of the cheese industry, founded in this state 100 years ago, and the one hundredth anniversary of the commercial ice cream industry. The farmer is glad to see the lush, green, natural pastures almost as much as bossy does, and Mrs. Housewife should be pleased to know that her husband's earning power lets her buy a quart of milk for 9 minutes average working time. It would have taken him 27 minutes fifty years ago. Milk's the best food, as well as the best buy on her grocery list.

County Field Day to Feature New Equipment

One of the newer pieces of equipment to be demonstrated at the Allegany County Agricultural Field Day July 25, on the John Zorn Farm will be the "Grasslan" Aerifier. The Aerifier is a new kind of implement designed especially to maintain the good condition of soil under continuous sod. Soils can be kept opened so that water, air and plant foods can get down to the root zones. A good seed bed can be prepared without destroying the existing vegetation.

The Aerifier does its work with curved, open spoons. The spoon pentrates the sod, scoops out a core of soil and leaves the sod through the same opening where it entered. The hole left at the surface is only as wide as the spoon. Through these openings lime and fertilizer are better able to get into the plant root zone and so encourage greater root growth.

This type of machinery which has proved very beneficial on old sod pastures in various parts of the county will be demonstrated at the Field Day for those interested.

Oat Variety Plots on Field Day Schedule

The Allegany County Agricultural Field Day is intended to bring farmers and other interested groups good farm and homemaking practices in a convincing manner and one of these will be an oat variety demonstration plot planted by the Farm Bureau in cooperation with the College of Agriculture at Cornell. The Field Day will be held on the John Zorn farm on the Angelica-Short Tract road on July 25th.

The oat plot consists of 9 or10 new varities which proven worthy of propagation in past tests conducted by the college. The use of the plot is to bring observers first hand knowledge of growth characteristics, straw length, disease resistance and hardiness. Yield tests will be competed when the plot is harvested later.

Tractor Contest for Boys Field Day Feature

Among the features of the Allegany County Agricultural Field Day on July 25 will be a boys tractor operator's contest. Laurence Dedrick, County 4-H Agent said the contest will be again conduced because of the interest last year and the safe operating methods taught. Joseph Sherman of the State Agricultural and Technical Institute at Alfred will be in charge of the event.

Contestants should be at the Field Day to register at 10:30 and receive the rules to be followed in driving a tractor and wagon over a set course and then backing the wagon precisely. The contestants will be scored on a point system covering every phase of sensible operation, percision driving and safe parking.

Rotenone Dust Best For Mexican Bean Beetles

Mexican bean beetles, the major pest of beans in New York State, are readily controlled with rotenone dust. Sprays containing ground cube root or parathion are also effective, according to entamologists at the Experiment Station at Geneva.

One application of a one per cent rotenone dust applied as the eggs are hatching in mid-July is generally sufficient, say the Station workers. Unusually heavy infestations may require a second treatment within a week or ten days. The dust must reach the undersurface of the leaves where the young grubs are feeding. A one per cent parathion dust will also give excellent control but must be used with caution.

Ordinarily George and Booker T. enjoyed more leisurely pursuits. Today they were discussing their individual prowess.
