The Amateur Gardener.

I've planted the peas in the rose bed,
I've set out some slips in the sun,
I'm wondering now with a care furrowed brow
What the job will be like when it's done.
The names that are written in Latin
I've studied with scrupulous care,
I've mixed up the seeds of all kinds of breeds
And scattered 'em everywhere.

The scheme will work out beyond question
In a highly original way.
The humble string bean side by side will be seen
With the pink and the poppy so gay,
But I tremble to think of the finish
As over the garden I gaze
Will they call me to eat the petunias so sweet
While tomato plants stand in a vase?

... Teach ... village for a number of years, seems of its value: Not only is it good food for one of the best feeds for cows, but it will be great ... just as a part of the ration for fattening of animals, perhaps with a little variation in the kind and amount of grain fed with it.

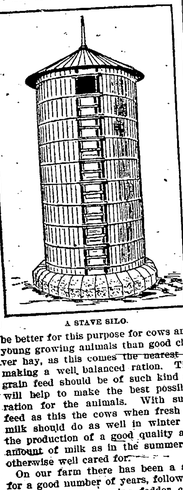
For spring calves the following winter and for the older growing animals silage will be found very useful as a part of their feed. Try it, and you will be surprised to find how well they like it. It can be fed in moderation to pigs and brood sows also with advantage.

In my opinion it requires less work to put the crop in the silo than to harvest in the old way and handle over two or three times before it can be placed before the cows or other stock. And, further, I believe the crop thus cared for will be worth at least one-third more, all things considered, than when dry fed. A large amount of corn can be put in the silo of average size, and when the work is completed it is then under shelter in the best condition now known and ready for use when wanted.

The silo should be thoroughly constructed, be air and water tight. The round form is the one now mostly used, and they should not be too large in diameter, but of good height, for the better keeping and feeding of the silage. They should be placed where it will be the most convenient, thus saving time and labor. Where there is a large stock to feed it would be better to have two moderate sized silos than a very large one. Where it is desirable to make use of a large amount of green feed in the summer season a small silo, filled expressly for the purpose, will be found of the greatest advantage, as experience has proved.

Where a crop of corn is well eared the best of them can be broken off to husk and the remainder put in the silo as soon as possible. Not only can corn be made into ensilage, although it may be the best crop for the purpose, but clover, alfalfa and even oats and rye when at the proper stage of growth. A silo filled with a mixture of corn and clover would make an excellent feed for stock.

Silage should not be fed alone to stock. There should be along with it a portion of dry fodder, and none will be better for this purpose for cows and young growing animals than good clover hay, as this comes the nearest to making a well balanced ration. The grain feed should be of such kind as will help to make the best possible ration for the animals. With such feed as this the cows when fresh in milk should do as well in winter in the production of a good quality and amount of milk as in the summer if otherwise well cared for.



A STAVE SILO.

On our farm there has been a silo for a good number of years, following the practice of growing fodder corn to cure and feed dry, and the conclusion here arrived at are largely the results of experience. The farmer, rightly situated, who builds a silo and manages an intelligent use of it can hardly fail of being pleased with the results and will wonder why he did not do it before.

Selecting the Sire.

Nothing is of greater importance to a breeder than the fortunate selection of a good sire. Many at the start, through lack of capital, have to put up with the best they can get at a price befitting the length of their pocket, but sometimes such a one, bought with care and good judgment and after a careful survey of the herd selected from, proves a fortune. At any rate, no breeder should ever begrudge the most he can afford for the services of a good sire, of whatever stock it may be. He must use his best judgment and aim at good blood and good breeding and get as much individual merit as he can for his money, and then he will not go far wrong.—W. R. Gilbert.

To Tie a Mare.

A horseman makes the following suggestion: "If mares are to be tied at the time the colt suckles, the proper way to tie them is to run a halter strap through a piece of old rubber hose. Have a snap in the strap to fasten to the halter, keeping another strap near by with a snap on the end to use when the mare is taken out, and leave the strap and hose fastened to the surcingle. Tying in this way will prevent the colt from becoming entangled in the tie strap and choked."

Tourists Tramping Contest.

The Pennsylvania Railroad company and its subsidiary companies will this year award nearly $11,000 in prizes to employes for excellence in track maintenance. Of this sum $5,400 will go to supervisors and their assistants on the main line between New York and Washington and Philadelphia and Pittsburg.

A committee of maintenance of way officers goes over the line every few weeks during the year in a car attached to one of the regular high speed trains. Two glasses of water are placed on the sills of two rear windows, and every spill of water is counted against the score of the section of track over which the train is passing.

To make the record even more accurate an instrument has been specially designed to register every vibration of the car, either vertically or horizontally. This instrument, which is placed on the floor of the car, has two stems, with a hammer on the end of each. These stems are flexible steel and vibrate, one vertically and the other horizontally, with every jar of the car. The movements of the stems are recorded by pedometers, giving the number of vibrations, while cyclometers record the entire distance covered by the vibrations for the trip. Thus a severe vibration affects a greater cyclometer record than a slight irregularity. The smaller the amount of vibration the better the track.

This instrument is, of course, not infallible and does not undertake to indicate a low joint, the elevation of a curve or anything about the track more than its good and bad riding qualities, including line and surface. But when the record it makes is averaged with the number of pedometer readings and "spills" of water and some allowance made for relative speeds a fairly accurate estimate can be made of the riding qualities of the various sections of track. Upon the records the prizes are awarded.
