Mystery in W. J. Hartnett's Death

Boston, Jan. 2.—Although the report of the autopsy on the body of William J. Hartnett, a local labor leader who was found dead in his home Monday under suspicious circumstances, showed that death was due to violence, the police have released the son, William A. Hartnett, who had been held, and the investigation is made along other lines. Medical Examiner McDonald, who performed the autopsy, found that the dead man had a fractured skull, a broken nose, a deep cut over the left eye and another bad cut on the upper lip. The police say an investigation showed that young Hartnett was in no way connected with his father's death. The authorities are working on the theory that the elder Hartnett was assaulted while on his way home Saturday night and died as a result of his injuries.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE

The Old-Time Bosses Are Conspicuous by Their Absence.

Executive and Other State Officers Looking to the People for Approval. Workingmen in Office — Increased Appropriation Needed — A Direct Primaries Law Desired.

(Special Correspondence.)

Albany, Jan. 2.—It is with no slight feeling of satisfaction that a majority of the electors of the state of New York have followed the inauguration of Governor Hughes and the induction into office of the various minor officials chosen last November. The impression prevails that the new administration will look to the people rather than to party bosses for approval of its acts.

Reading the governor's inaugural address and his first annual message one is impressed with the sincerity of all that he utters. Clean-cut, earnest, honest in every statement and in the interest of all the people are his various recommendations. No self-constituted boss dared suggest a change in line or sentence.

Without attempting to dictate to the legislature the new executive has made obviously clear what he believes will be for the best interests of the commonwealth regardless of the claims of organization or party. This first week of his administration brings to the executive the congratulations of the people regardless of past or present political affiliations.

Bosses Conspicuous by Absence.

It is a matter of congratulation that all the new state officials from governor to state engineer have made appointments which may be said to reflect their own ideas as to fitness and capability. That there are many disappointed applicants for positions in the various counties of the state, and some few disgruntled local bosses, goes without saying. A party out of power for 12 years obligates itself to many aspiring individuals in every assembly district. To care for them all upon sudden and unexpected elevation to power is impossible. Besides, each newly-inducted official feels that he is called upon to bear not only the responsibilities of his office but the burden of showing to the opposition that his party is capable of discharging with fidelity and honor the duties devolving upon it through its successful candidates. Patronage necessarily makes men but it more frequently unmakes party organizations.

No Shadows at the Capitol.

There are no lurking shadows at the state Capitol these days. No ambitious boss occupies the room of the lieutenant governor to direct each move of the majority of the senate, instating upon legislation for selfish ends. No interference with the assembly as to its choice of a presiding officer exists. The atmosphere and the lobby are clearer than they have been in many years.

Most of those who forgot their civic obligations in a questionable struggle for self are this year absent from the senate. There is a realization that it is best to accede to the demands of the people and inaugurate much-needed reforms. Members of the two houses no longer prodigally distribute to party henchmen railway transportation. The water supply situation appears to be changing for the better, much to the satisfaction of those who [illegible] of great.

Work in Prospect.

Secretary of State Whalen has selected a unique table, which he will place in dispute of the duties of his office. Mr. Whalen means to take in hand the dressing room of the workmen in Albany cities. He proposes to exert all his efforts in showing that the work done today is as capable of assuming the responsibilities of high government as any other citizen. Mr. Whalen states that his plan is to so conduct the affairs of the office that the wishes of the people shall be carried out and the office be made a piece of business instead of the home of graft.

During the past year the business of the office of the secretary of state has [illegible] The receipts of the office are more than $26,000 in excess of those of 1905. In view of this one fact alone the new secretary will probably be given a larger appropriation for the conduct of the office.

Brooklyn Legislators For Brooklyn.

It is expected that members of senate and assembly from Brooklyn, irrespective of party affiliations, will work together harmoniously during the present session for the needs of that growing borough. A united policy will, it is expected, be pursued in an effort to secure rear rapid transit. At a recent conference of these representatives it was decided to have framed such a legislative bill as would meet the desires of the people, commend it to the two houses of the legislature and to the favor of Governor Hughes. Any person who has ever tried to reach Brooklyn during a rush hour concedes the necessity for an improvement in the matter of not only rapid but comfort ble transportation for thousands of citizens in the metropolis.

KID HERMAN KNOCKED OUT.

In the Eighth Round Gans Got an Opening and Felled Him With a Blow on the Jaw.

Tonopah, Nev., Jan. 2. — Joe Gans tonight true to the "dope" yesterday. After playing with Herman for eight rounds the champion landed a full swing on the point of his jaw, and Chicago's favorite fighter went down and out. It was apparent from the start that Herman had little chance of winning. Gans blocked his blows with ease and a no time was he worried in the least.

In the first round Gans started to feel things out, Herman was willing to fight but the champion stalled him off. In the second round Gans began to open up, Herman's attempts to land mostly ended in failure.

Gans blocked Herman's leads with gloves and elbows and when the opportunity presented feinted right and left jolts on his opponent's face.

The third and fourth rounds were repetitions of the second. Herman was the favorite with the crowd.

When he landed they cheered wildly. Gans only drew applause when he fooled his referee.

In the fifth round Gans, having measured his man, slowed down. This was the only round where Herman made any showing. He waded in and swung hard rights and lefts. Gans appeared careless and a number of blows landed. The crowd cheered madly for the Chicago man.

The sixth and seventh rounds were all Gans'. In the eighth Gans started out by feinting and drawing Herman's guard. Then Gans backed Herman ring until Gans worked his opponent in a corner. Joe feinted with his left, Herman swung wildly with his left and gave an opening. Like a flash Gans whipped a left and then a swing for right flush on the point of the jaw. Herman dropped like a log with his face buried in his hands. He lay motionless at the edge of the ring. Gans walked away; it was all over.

Nate Lewis ran around the ring to where the kid lay and helped him to rise. Kid Herman was senseless. At the count of 10 Lewis led Adam Ryan carried their protege to his corner where three minutes elapsed before he came to.

In the second round the men were milling fiercely when the gong sounded. Herman stepped back from a clinch. Gans not hearing the bell landed a hard right on the neck. The crowd hissed and hooted.

Referee Graney stopped the wrestling and made a public apology.

Not content with it, Gans went to his corner and shook hands with his opponent. The crowd cheered as Gans returned to his corner.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(Special Correspondence.)

The estimated true value of real property and improvements in the District of Columbia averages $21,620.64 an acre, and for each man, woman and child in the District of Columbia these is $2,785.59. The figures are fresh from the statistic makers of the census bureau. A little pamphlet has just been issued from that interesting governmental bureau purporting to show the "estimated true value of property" in each of the several states and territories for the years 1900 and 1904. It permits a comparative study that is regarded as remarkable in its results.

Valuation of the District.

For instance, the great state of New York, worth about $10,000,000,000, brings only $300 an acre when averaged by the census bureau experts. In the Empire State the men, women and children are accredited with only $1,157.38 each, a per capita wealth less than half that of the national capital. Maryland is put down as worth "in real property and improvements" just $904,469,735, all of which necessarily includes the city of Baltimore. The District of Columbia is valued at $830,244,062, almost as much as the entire state of Maryland, with only 38,400 acres as against 6,862,240 acres in Maryland.

Nontaxable Property.

The entire "continental United States," according to the report, was worth in real property in 1904 only $62,241,492,134, which, however, is an increase of $10,000,000,000 over the valuation given for 1900. Of the grand total more than five and a half billion dollars' worth of property is not taxable. The District of Columbia alone carries $360,027,470 in exempt property, most of which, of course, belongs to the government.

Rich in Street Railways.

The District of Columbia has nearly $46,000,000 in street railways, shipping, waterworks, etc., as against $41,000,000 for Virginia and about $24,000,000 for West Virginia. In that one item the District presents a higher valuation than Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Delaware, North or South Carolina, Florida or nine-tenths of the western states. In the "products of agriculture, manufactures and mining, imported merchandise, clothing and personal adornments and furniture, carriages and kindred property" the District has $142,827,240.

Passing of Long Bridge.

The historic Long bridge will soon pass into memory. For several weeks workmen have been busy tearing down the old structure and but a remnant remains. Since the Pennsylvania railroad constructed the new steel bridge across the Potomac and the government built the Potomac highway bridge there is no longer any use for the old bridge.

The old Long bridge dates from the administration of Thomas Jefferson. In the winter of 1807-08 congress passed an act authorizing its construction. The "new bridge," as it was then called, cost $160,000. It was well built, a little over a mile in length, with a broad carriage way and passages for pedestrians on either side.

British Left It Intact.

General Ross and the British invaded the capital during the war of 1812, burned the capitol, scared children and drank up all the good Madeira they could find, but for some reason not explained by historians failed to molest Long bridge. On Feb. 22, 1831, a spring freshet carried away portions of the bridge.

The bridge was reopened for traffic Oct. 20, 1835. George W. Hughes was the engineer.

Of Historic Interest.

The next event of importance in the old structure was another flood, but not of water. It was a flood of human beings, wild with consternation, that poured over the old bridge when, on July 23, 1861, the panic stricken Union army hastened from the field of Bull Run back to the capital. From that day the bridge was by reason of this connection, formed part of a great historic [illegible]

Committee Will Visit Cuba Shortly.

A committee from the National Editorial association, headed by J. H. Jenkins, called on the president the other day and asked him to speak before the meeting of the association at the Jamestown exposition next summer. The president said he would be glad to do so if the meeting of the association should be held about the time he will visit the exposition to take part in Georgia day exercises. He hopes yet to go to the Georgia day celebration at the Georgia building because his mother was a Georgian. The date has not been settled, but it will be either the 12th, 14th or 15th of June.

The president will open the exposition in April, and his trip in June will be his second one.
