War Music by the Band.

Tommy Atkins is to be trained to sing if certain people in London have their way. It is proposed to teach the soldiers to sing the songs of their native land—that is, Irish, Scotch, Welsh and English tunes. This idea should not be confounded with battle music by the band, which never really existed to any extent except in fiction. It was natural that the happiest moment when the British troops were fighting their way through the sepoy quarters to the citadel of Lucknow if only to cheer the distressed survivors of the hopeless garrison. It was to hearten the prisoners rather than the rescuers. And then it was only the fever quickened faculties of Jessie Brown, the girl wife of a Scotch corporal, who detected the strains of "Auld Lang Syne" above the real music of Havelock's guns. The soldiers of the garrison had their ears trained upon the now advancing, now receding roar of the white man's cannon, signals that meant life or death to them. But an occasion like Lucknow comes rarely in war.

If an army band could inspire battle valor it would be about as ephemeral as "Dutch courage." Music cheers the soldier in camp and bivouac, but he charges best at the sound of the guns. A time when band music, even if it could be heard, would act rather as a soothing strup than a stimulant to valor.

It will be a good thing for Tommy Atkins and all other soldiers to learn to sing—really sing. Every military organization has its singers, few or many. Often they cannot sing at all in the real sense, but they have happy auditors, for it helps to kill time. Soldiers can sing away the blues and drown fatigue when they have no other resource. But singing takes breath, and when going in on a charge the fighter has no breath to spare. Shortness of breath has brought disaster to many a charging line, according to the chronicles of the field. A good commander takes care that his column shall not be "winded" before the crucial moment, and the last thing he would wish the men to do on starting for the enemy's parapets would be wasting good breath on music hall ballads.

No Passing of the Red Men.

While the picturesque Indian of books and reminiscences may be passing from the scene, the race of red men gives no indication of retiring out. The number of Indians has dwindled from 40 to 60 per cent in the course of a century, but yet there are upward of 300,000 in the United States. According to the statisticians, there is no race suicide observable in their case.

More than one-half of the Indians in this country now wear the white man's dress, wholly or in part. Fully one-half of this semicivilized element speak the English language. Tens of thousands of Indian families live in modern dwellings, they maintain schools and churches and have a church membership of over 40,000 all told. The race is represented in congress, in the learned professions, in commerce and in the athletic field. This last feature indicates that the race has not lost its physical vigor. The older Indians are naturally conservative and prefer to roam or live in shacks. But the young men and women take to new notions and are up to date in the ambitions. The future of the race is with them.

The publication of Charlotte Bronte's hitherto unprinted poem has brought to mind the very lukewarm welcome extended to her first poetical efforts in 1846 the poems of Currer, Ellis and Acton Bell were issued, and, according to Charlotte's statement, exactly two copies out of the edition were sold. The Bronte sisters transferred the rest of the edition "to the trunk maker."

Severely Exasperating.

"Don't you think Mrs. Spurrell has an awful temper?"

"She has, but can you blame the poor woman? She has a husband who just absolutely won't get mad at all."

Dear, Indeed!

"The dear, dear girls!" exclaimed Mrs. Pawkins, looking at her fashionable daughters enthusiastically.

"Yes; the dear, dear girls!" muttered Mr. Pawkins despondently.

Man yields to custom as he bows to fate. It all things ruled, mind, body and purse.—Crabbe.

Forbidden Games.

Almost every one of England's popular games has at one time or another been made illegal. Scotland is the home of golf, yet in 1457 the Scottish parliament passed an act entailing severe penalties on any one caught playing the game.

Edward III., Henry IV. and Henry VIII. all strongly objected to football, and Queen Elizabeth made it an offense punishable by imprisonment to play football. There is a record of sixteen people being imprisoned at once for breaking this law.

Football is still under a ban in some parts of the world. Two of the Swiss cantons refuse to allow it, and in Turkey it is absolutely illegal, and those who dare to play it are punished.

Among oddities of laws about games must be mentioned a French decree of the thirteenth century. By the king's command the gallants of the court were forbidden to play tennis "in their shirts." Whether his majesty of France insisted upon coats only or whether the unfortunate players were doomed to practice in complete suits of armor does not appear.—London Graphic.

Arboriculture In Africa.

Excepting perhaps some Malayan tribes the African negroes are said to be the finest agriculturists of all the natural races. The Bongos are said to have a greater variety of garden plants around their huts than are found in the fields and gardens of a German village. Irrigation is practiced. The Angolas, in the Kongo district, have practical irrigation. The Wachangu show wonderful skill in irrigating their terraced hillsides by tunnels of water diverted from the main stream. "They have a clear mode of irrigating equally a given surface. As the little canals of water are always elevated above the cultivated plants, they will tap them at a convenient spot above the beds to be watered and then turn the stream into a rough conduit made of the hollow stems of bananas cut in half, the end of each stem overlapping the next. Then as the water enters the last joint it is freely turned right and left, distributing the vivifying stream in all directions."—Southern Workman.

Too Cold For Overcoats.

"You do not find any one wearing overcoats in Alaska, even in the winter," said a man from that territory. "The principal thing to be careful about is keeping the head, hands and feet warm. In that part of Alaska where I have been the only land transportation is by dog sleds, and to follow them one has to drop into a dogtrot beside the sled. An ordinary suit is plenty thick enough to keep you warm, and an overcoat is dangerous in that temperature. Trotting alongside a sled wearing an overcoat would make you perspire, and the bitter cold would freeze the perspiration. The men there wear a fur cap that covers every part of the head and face except the eyes, and there is only a little peephole for them. Wool lined mitts are worn on the hands and moccasins with woolen stockings on the feet."—Baltimore Sun.

The late General Russell A. Alger had his faults, but he was dearly loved by his comrades of the G. A. R. They elected him commander in chief in 1889.

Those Mexican women who fainted at the spectacle of a bullfight should have collapsed at the mere thought of seeing it and then stayed away.

SILAS, WAKE UP

We can nearly all of us recall the sound of the old familiar voice of the "Pater" as in the early twilight of a cold winter's morning there came up the stairs, "Silas, Wake Up." The opening of our eyes, the effort to arouse, and then the falling back to sleep again, only to be aroused again with, "Silas, Wake Up." Then a determined effort, as deviously we hurried down stairs to get to work and assist in keeping things moving.

Mr. Andover has been aroused and his Rip Van Winkle stuper is a thing of the past. However there are indications that he will need be aroused again. Did you ever think, and soberly think about what is now the most pressing necessity for the growth and prosperity of Andover. Most any set of determined people can land factories and industries in a wide awake village with the natural advantages of which we are blessed with many. But it takes much greater wisdom to handle the newly acquired inhabitants than it did to get them. If you do not treat them right you cannot expect to keep them. While the writer does not believe that people with means should invest their money simply from a philanthropic standpoint alone, we do believe that enough of it should be parted with to furnish people who want to come into our village and become a part of our Greater Andover with suitable homes, at a moderate rent. Laboring people cannot afford to come to Andover and pay higher rents for their houses, and higher prices for the comforts of life than they can procure in other localities for the same money. They will not come here to work if they have to; and our industries will have to close their doors as they have done in many another community for the lack of labor. They don't want great mansions built for the accommodation of people with wealth. They want good, warm, easy cottages that they can live in and make a happy home for themselves until such a time as by economy and hard work they are able to save enough of their earnings to build their own residence as they want it. There are needed at this writing houses for ten families, and within three months time there will be other ten families wanting shelter in Andover, but not a house to be had, nor are any in course of construction. "Silas, Wake Up!" This is truly a matter that should be taken in hand by the Business Men's Association or some other organization, and let us see to it that we have places for more families to live in before we invite them to make their home with us. "Silas, Wake Up."

Then there is also our Main street cinder path that needs our attention. You can call it "Andover's Folly" if you like. What's needed? Why a pavement, that will be sleek, clean, permanent and a pride to every citizen and a doing away with mud, or rather coal cinder grime. There now, somebody will cry taxes. That's the old slogan that defeats every project for advancement that is ever defeated. But Andover has heard the pater voice once on this subject, and the familiar tones of "Silas, Wake Up," will not need sound up the stairs many more times before the true economy of the movement will be clear to all. Who would go back to the old "Cube on the Square" as "Quine Sabe" used to call the old school house, nobody, that's right. And Mr. Andover says to the committee of 47, "Sit up now and listen." Main street must be paved. The committee may shiver, but it must listen, for when Mr. Andover says so it's bound to come. Andover has chosen to do and you must get in time to help. So, "Wake Up, Silas, Wake Up."

YOUR GAWKY BOY

That gawky boy of yours—ungainly, gaunt, shy, unprepossessing, as he is,—writes Henry A. Shute in the March Delineator. You nag him. You laugh at him and ridicule him. Did you ever realize how it hurts? You ought to realize it for it is not long since you knew how it felt. You would have stood pain like a man and so does your boy. You would have borne privation like a stoic, and so does your boy, and there would have been a grim sort of enjoyment in it, for the joy of resistance is fully awake at fourteen.

But you could not bear ridicule and he cannot, and yet there is scarcely a day when you do not cause him sharp discomfort.

If he becomes depressed and despondent, he confides his troubles in his dog, which sits in front of him gazing at him with an almost human expression of sympathy and puts his paw on his master's knee.

A bit unfortunate, isn't it, that your own boy is obliged to depend on his mother and his dog for sympathy and affection? He gets none from you and but little from his brothers and sisters. Is it true, isn't it?

My friend, if you paid as much personal attention to the proper development of your boy as you do in raising the two minute trotter, or the brindled Guernsey, or the Black Strain Jubilee of Orpington, or in beating Ingy, or in your game of whist, you would be astonished at the results.

The Cuba papers describe the fine work of a sculptor in that village, E. G. Goodrich, in the employ of Mr. Gill. The design is for a monument to be placed upon the grave of the little son of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Elliott of Milliport, Pa. The material is Bedford (Ind) Limestone and the figure that of a dog just awakened from a resting or sleeping posture with his fore paws outstretched, seemingly just ready to spring for something. Leaning up against the dog is a scroll which bears the name of the boy with dates of birth and death. Till death separated them the boy and dog were inseparable companions. The work is warmly praised by those viewing it especially as a fine photo of the dog was all Mr. Goodrich had as a model.
