Denounces Secret Divorces.

Justice David J. Brewer of the United States supreme court has come out publicly in opposition to divorce suit proceedings held in private and with the testimony sealed. Referring to the sealing or testimony for the purpose of preventing publicity in such suits Justice Brewer said: "While I regret the nauseous details so often exposed, still I believe that it is better to have no divorce than divorce obtained by secret process. With that sentiment every man and woman who believe in properly protecting society and the home will heartily agree. He said some other sensible things in the course of his address the other night which are worth repeating. He discussed the movement of some of the labor organizations to make government by injunction a political issue. He said that so far from removing or restricting this power there never was a time when the unrestrictive and vigorous exercise of it was worth more to the union and its interests than now. Referring to the hostile attitude of the labor organizations he said that he knew that the principal sentiment among them was that they were aimed at but that in the future they would change this view and come to the belief that the restrictive power of the courts was exercised not to destroy justice nor to rob any individual of his vested rights, but to prevent riot and bloodshed, to protect society. He called attention to the experience the country had with the Debs strikes some years ago as a forcible illustration that prevention was better than bloodshed.

Day, Mrs. J. Ic Ewen and Mrs. Enos W Barnes, of that place. It is said that the Monday Club is divided as to whether the money should go for equipment for the new public library or for building in Wellsville. THOUGHTS ON BUSINESS
BY
WALDO PONDRAY WARREN

THINK BIG

MEN often think of a position as being just about so big and no bigger, when, as a matter of fact, a position is often what a man makes it. A man was making about $1,500 a year out of a certain position and thought he was doing all that could be done to advance the business. The employer thought otherwise, and gave the place to the woman who soon made the position worth $8,000 a year—at exactly the same commission.

The difference was in the men—in other words, in what the two men thought about the work. One had a little conception of what the work should be, and the other had a big conception of it. The one thought little thoughts, and the other thought big thoughts.

The standards of two men may differ, not because one is more capable than the other, but because one is familiar with big things and the other is not. The time was when the former worked in smaller grooves himself, but when he saw a wider view of what his work might be he rose to the occasion and became a bigger man. It is just about as easy to think of a mountain as it is to think of a hill—when you turn your mind to contemplate it. The mind is like a rubber band—you can stretch it to fit almost anything, but it draws in, to a small scope when you let go.

Make it your business to know what is the best that might be in your line of work, and stretch your mind to conceive it, and then devise some way to attain it.

Notes of Interest

Gen. Leonard Wood Appointed to Succeed Gen. Bell as Head of Army—Is Now Chief of Staff of the Army, United States Army.

MAJOR GENERAL LEONARD WOOD, who will next April relinquish the post of commanding officer of the department of the east to become chief of the general staff of the United States army in the place of Major General J. Franklin Bell, is only forty-nine years of age, and his rise in the army has been one of the most remarkable in history. He entered the medical service as assistant surgeon on Jan. 1, 1886, and has been promoted by leaps and bounds.

Wood's designation by Secretary of War Dickinson for the most important administrative command in the gift of the war department did not present any surprise among army officers in Washington the other day. It can also be stated on the authority of one of the army's best known officers that the appointment is one that will be approved by most of the rank and file. Several years ago this statement would have been impossible, but today, with his Cuban and Philippine records and his record at Governors Island behind him, even General Wood's critics admit his ability, energy and capacity for work. His active career as a soldier may properly be said to have begun when he became the colonel of the now famous rough riders at the outset of the Spanish-American war, the lieutenant colonel being Theodore Roosevelt, then and now one of General Wood's most intimate friends.

Sample of His Originality.

General Wood, who was born on Oct. 9, 1860, in Winchester, N. H., attended in his boyhood a school in Middleboro, Mass., and a Middleboro man told some time ago the following story of the effect and original mind that the boy had:

"I remember one day in school Wood was called up in the grammar lesson. The teacher said:

"'Leonard, give me a sentence, and we'll see if we can change it to the imperative mood.'

"'The horse draws the cart,' said Leonard.

"'Very good. The horse draws the cart. Now change the sentence to a mood imperative.'

"'Get up!' said young Wood."

Attention was called to Wood before he had been in the army six months. His first service was in the campaign against the hostile Indians in Arizona and New Mexico. He voluntarily carried dispatches through a region infested with hostile Indians, making a journey of seventy miles in one night and walking thirty miles the next day. For his action in this campaign he was awarded a medal of honor in 1886. Wood was in that running fight from start to finish and was commended for "coolness, bravery and loyal support" by General Lawton as "the only officer" who had been with him "through the whole campaign." At one time during that expedition Wood was temporarily in command of all the infantry, and at another time he exercised a similar command over Lawton's scouts.

After serving at various army posts from July, 1889, to September, 1895, General Wood was ordered to Washington for duty as attending surgeon to the army officers serving in Washington. It was during this period that he became acquainted with Colonel Roosevelt.

Served In the Cuban War.

General Wood was one of the physicians to President McKinley and Secretary of War Alger. When the Spanish war broke out Colonel Roosevelt, who had a high regard for General Wood's ability as a soldier, obtained President McKinley's consent for the organization of the First United States volunteer cavalry, which became known as the rough riders. At Colonel Roosevelt's request General Wood was appointed colonel of the regiment. After organizing and equipping the rough riders at San Antonio, Tex., the regiment went to the front and served through the whole Cuban campaign.

On July 8, 1898, General Wood was made a brigadier general of volunteers and assumed command of the Second brigade, cavalry division of the Fifth army corps, which participated in the battles of Las Guasimas and San Juan. When the Spanish forces at Santiago surrendered in July, 1898, General Wood was appointed military governor of that city, and on Oct. 7, 1898, he was assigned to the command of the department of Santiago, serving also as civil governor of the province of Santiago. On July 1, 1899, the two eastern provinces of Cuba, Santiago and Puerto Principe, were consolidated and placed under General Wood's command. From Dec. 20, 1899, to May 20, 1902, when the American troops left Cuba, General Wood served as military governor.

In February, 1901, President McKinley appointed General Wood a brigadier general in the regular army on the completion of his services as governor. The nomination was opposed by several influential senators on the ground that General Woods' highest rank in the regular army had been that of a captain in the medical corps. After a long fight, however, the nomination was confirmed.

Famous For His Long Stride.

From Aug. 6, 1903, to April 12, 1906, he commanded the department of Mindanao and was civil governor of Moro province in the Philippines. He commanded the Philippines division from Feb. 1, 1906, to Feb. 20, 1908. General Wood, who has commanded the department of the east at Governors Island, New York, since Nov. 10, 1908, is married and has three children.

When Leonard Wood was a student at Harvard his name was intimately connected with college athletics of all sorts, but principally with running and walking. Big, rawboned and lithe, he resembled in his poses an Indian untrammeled by civilization or civilization's clothes. The free and easy swing of his gait in those early formation days at college has never left him. On the plains in the nineties, when his military yearning led him to forsake his official duties—those of an army surgeon—for the dangers and fascination of a volunteer scout, the tireless energy won by athletic training stood him in good stead. The young army doctor even at that early period of his career became famous for his long and powerful stride. This fame followed him to San Juan, and when in after days he added leaves to his wreath of glory by reclaiming Santiago from its degradation and filth he became known to the wondering Cubans as "the man with the lion's stride." General Wood's ordinary stride is forty inches—two inches longer than the regulation step—and it is held that he can cover more ground in a day than any other man in the army.

Oyster Cure For Dyspepsia.

According to a London authority, some English physicians are ordering patients to eat oysters that have been well soaked in sea water as a cure for dyspepsia and tuberculosis.

MAJOR GENERAL LEONARD WOOD AND HIS WIFE.

Man With the Lion's Stride.

Chief Friend of the Roosevelts and Military Governor of Cuba, Wooed by Both Sides—Is Now Chief of Staff of the Army.

[illegible] Winner, speaking the other night before his majesty's death, insisted that Leopold had been greatly misunderstood by the world. He pictured the king's intense admiration for the United States, which his majesty was anxious to visit, but was prevented from doing so by the Kongo criticism. However, the king had prevailed on Prince Albert to go, as he considered this a most useful preparation for the future ruler of Belgium.

The king had a marked respect for Theodore Roosevelt. He never likes photographs around, but placed President Roosevelt's autograph pictures in his favorite office in the Brussels palace beside those of Princess Clementine and Prince Albert. Continuing, the senator said:

"The king has been a slave to work and business. It is a fact that fifteen minutes before the operation he dictated documents relatiug to certain negotiations and insisted before going under chloroform upon correcting the typewritten sheets. It was this marvelous intellect and doggedness which conceived the Kongo project. He lost money at first, but emerged rich.

"The whole trouble in the Kongo was that the system was bad—worse than the king thought. The eternal cry was rubber and yet more rubber, and it must be remembered that the military commanders in the Kongo had the double capacity of soldier and merchant. They had to get rubber. Nevertheless many of the stories of abuses are absolutely untrue."

The senator championed King Leopold as the great benefactor of Belgium. He had developed cities and erected monuments and public buildings at his own expense. He had supported architecture and advanced the prosperity of the people.

THREE KINDS OF LIES.

Plain Lies, D——d Lies, and Then There Are Statistics.

"There are three kinds of lies—plain lies, d——d lies and statistics," said Census Dirctor E. Dana Durand, addressing the census supervisors of Ohio, Kentucky and southern Indiana at the Sinton hotel, in Cincinnati, the other day. "Now, we don't want the census of 1910 to come in this classification. We want the exact number of people in the United States and a few facts about each one. I want you to do your best to get them, and get them straight.

"These lies I have spoken of must be dealt with in a peculiar manner. The plain lies can be seen, the d——d lies are a bit harder to get after, but the statistics ought not to have a single flaw."

ONE ON LA FOLLETTE.

Wisconsin Statesman Gets It "In the Neck," but Has His Joke.

Senator Robert M. La Follette turned up in the senate restaurant at Washington the other afternoon with his neck in a sling.

"What's the matter, Bob?" asked Senator Bourne of Oregon.

"Carbuncle," replied the Wisconsin statesman.

"How the enemy would have rejoiced," remarked Taylor of Tennessee, "if this affliction had befallen you, say, six months ago!"

"I haven't the slightest doubt," whispered La Follette, "that a proposition to put carbuncles on the free list would have been enthusiastically approved."

One of the latest applications of electric illumination is the lighting of golf links. Hundreds of onlookers watched the putting matches by electric light at the Dunwoodie Country club recently when the new putting course of six holes was used for the first time.

The Ladies' Chance.

[illegible] first place, we're going to make it possible for women—good women—to see the fight. Every man in the world will be crazy to see it. Why not the women?—Tex Rickard, Promoter of Jeffries-Johnson Fight.]

Now, ladies, we hope you'll be quiet
And not keep on bothering us.
A truce to your howl and your riot,
Your "Give us a vote" and such fuss!
Your "cause," you've been eager to flaunt it,
Your claim for "fair play" may be right.
Well, here is your chance if you want it—
Go buy a good seat for the fight!

For, note, there'll be ample provision
For ladies to sit round the ring
And watch for the fateful decision
That weeping-at-plaudits shall bring
And even the slavery of marriage
Will trade a bar to delicti.
There's a check room for each baby carriage
You happen to take to the fight.

Yes, ladies, at last real equality
Is granted to you as to men.
Don't look at the gift with frivolity.
But get your seat quick as you can.
What's commonplace voting, dear ladies,
Compared with the jubilant night
When heavyweights battle like ladies
In a regular championship fight?

Two short years ago who'd have dared to
Make such a bold offer to you?
The fool, he'd have never been spared to
His friends, the rush offer to run.
But at last you have forced him to own it
That brutal man's equal you be.
By your suffragette tactics you've shown it.
That you're quite as bloodthirsty as he.

You can drive him out quickly if you use the mail-order houses' own weapon—advertising. Mail order concerns are spending thousands of dollars every week in order to get trade from the home merchants. Do you think for a minute they would keep it up if they didn't get the business? Don't take it for granted that every one within a radius of 25 miles knows what you have to sell, and what your prices are. Nine times out of ten your prices are lower, but the customer is influenced by the up-to-date advertising of the mail order house. Every article you advertise should be described and priced.
