No Excise Legislation

An Albany dispatch to the New York Sun said: "The announcement is made on excellent authority that there will be no local option legislation this year, and that the liquor tax rates will remain the same. There may be some reform legislation directed against the dives, disreputable hotels and saloons and making it impossible for a saloon property to be used as such after a conviction has been had, and some of the bills perfecting the existing excise laws which State Excise Commissioner Maynard N. Clements has prepared may get through, but the great proposition of local option for cities "is dead."

Imaginings on this subject played a big part in the campaign. A good many voters who were fooled thereby will be interested in seeing the course which events have taken.

DISLIKE DIRECT PRIMARY.

Wisconsin and Minnesota Discussing Proposed Repeal of Their Laws.

Albany, Feb. 2.—Some members of the legislature who have been hunting for information as to the working of the direct primary system in those states where it has been tried believe that there is little to commend the system in the way of practical results. The governors of several of these states have been quoted as favoring it. Some of the legislators point out that those who have been chosen to high office as a result of the system naturally would favor it, and it is doubtful if such testimony will have much weight.

One editorial expression from Wisconsin, which was a pioneer in the direct primary movement, has been placed in the hands of many legislators.—It is from the Milwaukee Sentinel, the leading Republican paper of the state. That paper said on Jan. 22:

Minnesota has had enough of the expensive direct primary experiment. Many of its former champions have been converted and are now clamoring for a return to the former system. The growing sentiment of the state has been put in a nutshell: "In theory the law is ideal; in practice it is a disgraceful farce."

A bill has been introduced into the legislature providing for the repeal of the present law—at least as far as county, legislative, state and congressional candidates are concerned.

Wisconsin can sympathize with her suffering sister state. So far as we are aware, not a single advantage claimed for the law has been realized.

It is easy to stage and charge that only discomfited machine politicians oppose the law, but in this state it rallied upon us the most powerful political machine Wisconsin has ever known.

Whether it has seen any improvement over previous political machines hereabouts is at least open to debate and honest difference of opinion.

What political right has been secured to the people that they did not have in former times? No one there has an assumption would find that the people are enjoying any greater political freedom today than here before. If they have attended the caucuses of the past and taken an active interest in politics at all, their voice would have been heard and they never felt.

The poor man who aspires to office is practically barred under the present law. It has the most expensive senatorial campaign in the history of the state. The men who contemplate becoming candidates for state offices two years from now had better begin to save their spare cash. They will need it all in the "free for all" that is ahead of them.

Weak or bad candidates are impossible under the present law, we are told. As a matter of fact, the possibilities of such candidates are almost infinitely enhanced. We venture the assertion that in our last state primaries not one voter in a thousand knew the character or qualifications of the candidates on the respective tickets.

It is assumed that the candidate is responsible to the people who nominate him, not to the party or convention. Nonsense! He is responsible to the fellows who pulled the wires and paid the bills.

The hypocrisy of this agitation is evident from the fact that when these primary "reformers" are beaten under their own law they repudiate it, cry "Stop, thief!" and prepare to "scout." This law is ideal only when it nominates the "reformers."

It is too much to expect the total repeal of this law at this time, but some such compromise as the Minnesota bill is feasible and sensible.

VOTE ON BARGE CANAL.

It Was Carried by the Voters in Two Great Cities.

Albany, Feb. 2.—Some of the legislators who think the great cities would control nominations under a direct primary system have been interested to look up the figures by which the hundred and one million dollar canal improvements were voted. It has been generally known that owing to the carelessness or lack of interest on the part of the anti-canal counties the majority of the votes cast for that great improvement came from a few of the centers of population. A study of the figures indicates not only that less than a majority of the voters of the state expressed themselves at all, but that the greater part of those who favored the canal improvement came from the cities of New York and Buffalo.

There were cast in this state by the Republican and Democratic parties for an associate judge of the court of appeals in the year 1903, which was the year when the canal improvement was voted upon, a total of 1,307,926, which was about 200,000 less than would have been cast in a normal year if a complete state ticket had been in the field.

The total vote on the canal proposition was but little more than half of this, being 673,010.

The vote rolled up in the greater cities against the country. From Erie and Greater New York counties the vote was as follows:

Erie	23,451
Kings	162,282
New York	252,608
Queens	20,945
Richmond	8,965
Total	484,251

There were cast against the amendment in the entire state 427,638, so that the vote in Greater New York and Erie county was more than 50,000 in excess of all the opposition which could be mustered, and it was pretty generally understood at that time that if this measure were adopted it would mean a tax on the pocketbook of every property holder throughout the state. As one rural member put it: "If the people through indifference or carelessness neglect to take care of their own pocketbooks when the issue is squarely before them, what can be expected if they are all to take a hand in selecting an entire list of state, judicial, congressional, legislative and local officers unless somebody spends money enough and time enough to make a campaign such as is made at the general election. In no other way can the voters throughout the state get any acquaintance with the names and qualifications of the various candidates for all the officers."

And now comes the talking postal card. This is the invention of a French engineer and is soon to be introduced in to the United States. The person wishing to send a talking postal card to a friend, enters the booth and talks into a machine that records the words on the specially prepared postal card. When the recipient receives the card a hundred or a thousand miles away, he or perhaps she, takes the card to the nearest postal booth and inserts it in a machine which talks the message it contains. The record on the postal card is indistructible and the exact voice of the sender is heard.—Mt. Morris Union.
