The new Easter bonnet is a thing of the past. But the new Easter hat of the present sets the husband back quite as far as the bonnet used to.

The Chicago Great Western Railroad has adopted French twins, who are coming to this country with the 13th R. R. Engineers. It never occurred to us to picture a railroad as a tender parent, but it will probably be very gentle in taking care of these two pretty little girls. Aline and Denise. Chicago Great Western Railroad.

WHO'S WHO IN RUSSIA—AND HERE

There is a dispute among philologists concerning the meaning of the word "bolshevism." As the word "bolshe" means "larger" and "moshe" "smaller," it is usually inferred that a bolshevist is one who favors government by the majority, and that a menshevist is his political antithesis.

But we learn from a scholar of long residence in Russia that the word "bolshevism" means the larger or more extreme interpretation of the socialistic doctrines of Karl Marx. This reconciles the derivation of the word with the fact that the bolshevists are by no means the majority, eighty per cent of the Russian population gives them no recognition. The bolshevists are mostly city laborers who have given up laboring and entered the army, where they are much better fed and clothed. They constitute, in fact, a military despotism of the type that existed under the Czar, but not as well systematized.

The fact that the soviet army runs into seven figures is therefore of no value as a test of the political leanings of the total population. The bolshevist party includes the army, and practically controls it. Manufactured product and accumulated capital on which the regime exists is not exhausted, but none is being developed. Nothing much is being manufactured. New raw material is not being gathered. Depreciation and depletion must develop into exhaustion. And when no fuel is left the first must die. And after that, what? A practical, systematized despotism, czardom, in fact? Or democracy?

These questions would have little interest for us, were it not for the presence in our very midst of a nondescript aggregation of political medicine-men whose prescriptions contain an even more perplexing variety of ingredients than any of the mixtures that are being concocted at the European clinic. Provide a guarantee that they will always be the small minority that they are to-day, and we shall find more diversion than menace in their eccentric attempts at sociological diagnosis.

WHAT IS LABOR?

The Labor Party in politics is now more than a project. It has already taken official part in municipal elections.

The Prohibition Party, the Socialist Party, and others have been with us for a while, besides the two great divisions of political thought. But all of these have been alike in one feature of their purpose. Professedly, at any rate, their aim has been the weal and security of the whole country. They claimed that their policy was the best for America—not for themselves exclusively.

The Labor Party makes no such profession. It disclaims any interest in the prosperity of the nation. It is the advancement of one class only that its adherents demand, the one to which they belong. America, as a sovereign people, may go to the everlasting bonfire.

Their very name indicates their contempt of patriotism. Parties often profess it without practicing it, but there the very profession is absent. America cannot prosper if farmers cannot prosper, if chemists cannot, or scientists, architects, structural and mechanical engineers, analysts, actuaries, draftsmen, surgeons, geologists, surveyors — the list is endless. And the rank of labor, apparently, include none of them.

The darkest mystery in their creed arises from the confusion of definitions. What is a laboring man? One who does not work with his brain? If so, all the skilled trades are at once eliminated. Or one whose work involves extreme physical exertion? This excludes the watchmaker, the engraver, the composer, and a host of others. Well then, admit the watchmaker and all others who perform skilled manual work. This admits the linotyper, the bookkeeper, the stenographer, the chemist, and everybody else. Even a salesman undergoes more physical exertion than a linotyper.

The longer you look at it the runnier it gets.

Congress drew a long breath when the armistice was signed. But it did not realize that the tariff and currency questions were waiting for it just around the corner.

ENGLAND'S LABOR CONDITIONS

Labor conditions in England and in America are alike in character, but very different in degrees. America was at war a year and a half. England over four years. So many conditions that exist in the America of to-day are greatly intensified in England.

All the labor and all the capital in England that could be diverted from the mere necessities of life was swung to munition work, ship-building and the production of every essential for the Army and the Navy.

Now, the great body of labor is dissatisfied with the present and uncertain of the future. The cost of living there as here is extremely high. Workers are unwilling to accept any prospect of lesser wages and capitalists are timid.

The suggestion is made that labor itself should take some of the abandoned munition plants and run them, the Government furnishing the capital to refit and adapt them to other production and to run them after such refitting. It is proposed that the trade unions should undertake the task.

It is an admirable opportunity to test the practical working of a combination between the Government and the workers, doing away with capitalists and middlemen. The Government would ensure a supply of raw materials, and all products would go to the workers.

We hope that the plan may be tried out.

FOOD SELECTION FOR THE HOME

The most important daily incident of the housekeeper's routine is the selection and preparation of food for her family. It is a tribute to her intelligence and industry if her husband goes out to his work and her children to their school well nourished and satisfied. In order to bring this about she must know something of the proper combination of foods.

The meals served every day should contain a proportion of each of the following groups of foods:

1. Fruits and vegetables. These contain mineral substances of great value.

2. Meats and meat substitutes, such as poultry, fish, beans, eggs, milk and cheese. These are the muscle and tissue building foods.

3. Starches, including bread and cereals of all kinds. Cereals come nearer to supplying nutrition than any other class of foods.

4. Sugar, including honey, molasses and other sweets. Sugar supplies the body with heat and energy.

5. Fats such as butter and cream, lard and vegetable fats.

These classes of food are all necessary for a well-balanced diet. If each meal shows its due proportion of them, the household is on a good basis of variety and nutrition. The foods must of course be well cooked and seasoned and appetizingly served.

The housewife who carries out these principles is doing her duty to her home and to her country.

AND EIGHT CAME BACK

The original Princess Pats are back. Eight of them.

This Canadian regiment was named after Princess Patricia of Connaught, who has just as good a claim as any other princess to be godmother to a regiment. A regiment is judged more by its record than its name. And this regiment needs no alibis.

Eight of the original members are left. When England went to war she had no army, and the Germans were advancing on the Channel ports. A few British enthusiasts went to stop them — also some Canadians, including the Princess Pats; but there were more than eight of them then.

In the Ypres region, along the Messines ridge, back and forth thru villages that were taken and retaken time and again in the same week, up and down hills that were tagged with numerals to identify them as outposts that must be held or taken, the hellish carnival raged. And eight returned to tell of it.

The blood of those who died is on the heads of British politicians who for ten years preceding the war resisted every effort made to put England into a state of defense. Such politicians atone by proxy for their sins. The bill is paid by a younger generation in the bloody days that follow.

We have such politicians here. Thruout the war not a single German fighting plane was shot down by an American machine. Not one.

The record of American aviators is the admiration of England and France. But they secured their triumphs in foreign machines.

Fortunately we had the Allies with us. But thousands of Americans would be alive to-day if our armies had been screened by those clouds of aeroplanes that we talked about but did not build. Are we to repeat this policy of procrastination, to pay for it later with the blood of those who are now children in the village schools?

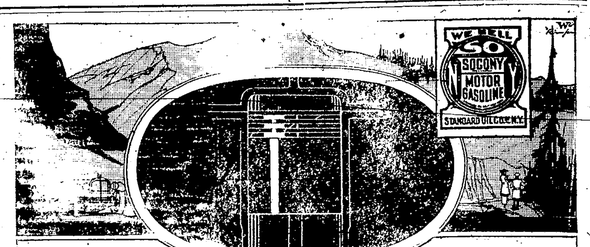
If you ask a tall and slight woman her opinion of the spring styles she will inform you that they are graceful and becoming. But we prefer to draw a veil over what the stout woman would say if you asked her the same question.

It was not surprising that the Germans, as soon as they learned that Marshal Foch had been appointed to confer with them, should concede that the polish divisions might land in Danzig. They have conferred with Marshal Foch before and know what his conferences are like.

Store competition is between stores that advertise, — and the advertising usually plays a determining part in the competition.

If a real estate ad "reads all right," and seems to you to be promising, don't let some one else make a prompter investigation and quicker decision than you.

If you have work for one more worker, you have work for a want ad.



A Perfect Piston Seal Makes Climbing Easy

There's no waste of power or fuel when piston rings fit properly and the oil keeps a gas-tight seal between them and the cylinder walls. Your car is spry and powerful. You get every usable ounce of power out of your fuel, whether bucking steep grades, speeding or loafing.

That's the kind of power insurance and fuel economy you always get from

A GOOD CREED FOR ANYBODY

I believe in the stuff I am handing out, in my firm and the organization I am working with, and my ability to get results. I believe that honest stuff can be passed out to honest men by honest methods.

I believe in working, not weeping; in boosting, not knocking, and in the pleasure of my job. I believe that a man gets what he goes after; that one deed done to-day is worth two deeds to-morrow, and that no man is down and out until he has lost faith in himself.

I believe in to-day, and the work I am doing; in to-morrow and the work I hope to do, and in the sure reward which the future holds.

I believe in courtesy, in kindness, in generosity, in good cheer, in friendship and honest competition.

I believe there is something doing somewhere for every man ready to do it; I believe that I am ready right now. — Ex.

SUBMARINE U B-148 TO BE SHOWN THROUGHOUT NEW YORK STATE

THE U B-148, a small type submarine, one of the five surrendered by the Germans that are now being brought to the United States by American naval crews, will be exhibited at various places in and about New York State while the Victory Liberty Loan Campaign is in progress. The submarine will be taken up the Hudson as far as draft will permit and then will proceed to Bridgeport and lay up at New London.

The five submersibles that will be exhibited at New York and other American ports will arrive in New York harbor the latter part of this month, probably a few days after the Victory Liberty Loan Campaign opens. Motion pictures of them will be made for display throughout the country. The submarines will then start on the itineraries mapped out by the Navy Department.

After their exhibition they will be carefully studied by construction and engineering experts of the Navy.

HELMETS REVEAL EX-KAISER'S DREAM

Gorgeous Headgear Reflects Plans for Triumphal Entry Into Paris, on "Der Tag," Seized by Yankees.

Twelve hundred polished nickel, gunmetal and patent leather helmets, with gorgeous trappings that eclipse the splendor of the headgear of the proudest of Roman centurions, have been pyramided in Victory Way, New York city, into a monument to the millions of Americans who shattered in mad moments dream of the greatest triumphal entry ever conceived in military history.

These helmets are part of a supply of 50,000 seized by the American Army of Occupation in Coblenz in December, 1918. A large warehouse, guarded by a German officer, housed the precious headgear that was to adorn the heads of the German Uhlans and infantrymen when the armed legions of the Kaiser entered down the Champs Elysees. The scorn of the Parisian was to be tempered by amazement when "Der Tag" arrived. The world was to stand aghast before the impressive spectacle.

Of all the gorgeous features of New York city's Victory Way, on the Park avenue plaza between Forty-fifth and Fiftieth streets the pyramids of helmets, with their more than ordinary significance, constitute one of the most interesting.

Back in 1916 Kaiser Wilhelm and his generals, intoxicated with repeated successes of arms, placed an order with a large German firm for the manufacture of the helmets. No grimy, unkempt German army would parade the streets of Paris. Eighty-five thousand picked soldiers, attired with scrupulous care, gleaming and glittering with military contraptions, would prove the folly of the French in opposing the will of the German war god.

The Coblenz warehouse was selected to protect the helmets until the eventful day arrived. But months ran into years. Still the headpieces were kept oiled and shiny, each wrapped carefully in paper. Thus they were found when the Americans took over Coblenz.

It has been said France fought the war for her existence, England for sport and America for souvenirs. And the Yankee penchant for souvenirs soon asserted itself. Some thousands of the helmets were distributed to the doughboys before an order came from general headquarters that the helmets were to be saved for transportation to the United States. They have been distributed for exhibition in the Victory Liberty Loan drive. New York city's Victory Way is studded with innovations that astound the visitor. The two pyramids of helmets will be on display throughout the Victory Liberty Loan Campaign.
