BOYS UNDER TWENTY-ONE NEED REFORMATIVE TREATMENT.—BILL FOR JOHN HOWARD INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The Prison Association of New York in its annual report to the Legislature points out some of the defects of the prison system of New York.

"1. Several thousand persons are punished for crime who need to be treated for disease.

"2. Several thousand boys are shut up and deprived of the very influence which they need to make them better. We punish where we ought to educate. A discipline which corrects and develops is beneficial; punishment which arrests the very development it ought to promote is bad for the state as well as for the boy."

Calling attention to several important measures before the Legislature to unify and improve the prison system, the Association declares that the most vital and most pressing of all questions is: "Shall we save our boys?"

New York has not been indifferent in the past to this important problem it has answered it so effectively with reference to a large number of delinquent boys that it only needs to employ the same principles and the same methods to get equally good results with the great number for whom no provision is made. In 1824 the state established the House of Refuge in New York, the first reformatory for boys in the United States. State or local appropriations have fostered institutions for dependent or delinquent children some of which are fine examples of modern methods in child saving.

In establishing the Elmira Reformatory in 1876 the state also took a radical and important step forward. It perceived that a boy of seventeen or eighteen might be just as much of a boy as one of fifteen, only a little larger and more dangerous if neglected. It saw that the process of education should go on until youth had come into maturity. Even in a physical sense, human beings do not reach maturity until twenty five or thirty. Under wise leadership the age limits for admission were fixed at from sixteen to thirty years. The establishment of this reformatory marked a great step in advance. It has been copied in other states of the Union and abroad. It has also had a powerful influence in making our prisons more educational and reformatory in character.

While this wise provision was made for youths who are felons under the law, no provisions, unfortunately, was made for those of the same age who are simply misdemeanants. In other words, a boy who steals twenty-five dollars becomes a ward of the state and has a chance for reformation; and a boy who steals only $24, unless placed on probation, is turned over to the unmerciful neglect and condemnation of some county jail or penitentiary. He not only has no chance for education and discipline; but the chances are that he will come out a little worse than he went in. The poor boy in New York is pretty well taken care of and so is the youthful felon, but the youthful misdemeanant has been overlooked.

It is appalling to think that by a process of legal indifference and neglect a boy may be sent for six months or a year to a jail where he comes into the most degraded society, where he is without work and without schooling, except the deplorable schooling in crime furnished by older and hardened offenders.

A few figures from the official reports of the State Commission of Prisons show how imperative is the need. The number of boys from 16 to 21 sentenced to jails and penitentiaries for the past year outside of Greater New York was 4,428 and the number of the same age sentenced in New York city was 14,044, a total of 18,472. In addition more than 10,000 are between the ages of 21, and 30 are likewise sentenced to the jails and penitentiaries.

The Prison Association of New York joins with the State Prison Commission in urging that a beginning be immediately made of a policy of reformatory treatment for the 18,000 boys under 21. Assemblyman Merritt has introduced a bill providing for the establishment of the "John Howard Industrial School," consisting a commission for the selection of a site and appropriating $50,000 for the purpose. "Such an appropriation" says the Prison Association "is in the highest degree economical. At present these boys are being made into old offenders. It is cheaper to reform them than to make criminals out of them, and while it is more economical it is more human. It is to be hoped that the bill will be promptly passed by the Legislature.

A North Side Fish Story

The fishing season opened last Friday and Dyke Creek was traversed by many an amateur follower of Izak Walton. Among the North Side fishermen was our herculean barber, who with his seven league boots and catch'em quick hooks and tackle you may have seen in the early dawning of the morning as he sallied forth in quest of recreation and a mess of trout. About two miles down the stream he got his first bite. And boys, oh boys! If he had only got him! but when he had succeeded in getting seven feet of the big brownie on the bank the fish took a half nelson on a root in the bank and flipped a back summersault into the water and Leo, where was he? He says they can all tell about their air ships and flying machines, but if his trip to the opposite bank of Dyke Creek wasn't the candy, you'll have to show him. But he valiantly clung to his pole and adjusting the tackle succeeded in landing a small specimen which tipped the scales at 1½ pounds. But when preparing the fish for the table several turtle doves flew out of it and commenced to bill and coo about the kitchen, and it wasn't much of a day for fish either.

Chub says he thinks it was the trout that took his hook last season. He only succeeded in getting his head and shoulders out of water, but he kept him there long enough to get out his easy opener and put his private mark on his ear. He says if anyone gets a fish of that description he wants them to look for three notches in his left ear. He will pay a liberal reward for his delivery at his home on Baker Street.
