The greatest of all sins are those that are found out.

• • •

Never mind what your neighbor says. It's what you do that counts.

• • •

The woman who marries her best friend is in grave danger of losing him.

• • •

The road to ruin is a well trodden trail. You can't miss it if you want to find it.

• • •

The only trouble with industry is that it needs to be a little more industrious.

• • •

Opportunities are never without value, altho many people are unable to fix the price.

• • •

We term them the weaker sex, but many a poor devil wishes they were not half so strong.

• • •

"Kissing is forbidden in Japan," chirps an exchange. Doesn't do any good to forbid it here.

• • •

The efficiency of some people consists principally of the recommendations of their friends.

• • •

It isn't the best policy to take all you can get. You may get more than you want to take.

• • •

The sun must love us dearly, otherwise it would not waste its rays upon us with such prodigality.

• • •

They say a woman can't drive a nail, but most of them can drive their husbands to do it for them.

• • •

Beware of the fellow who is over solicitous of your welfare. He probably wants to sell you a gold brick.

• • •

A man is not necessarily a fool because he acts like one. Some women could make a wooden Indian smile.

• • •

That Atlantic City mixup can hardly be called a prize fight, after all. Payment was guaranteed in advance.

• • •

It is universally admitted that the Lord created but one perfect man, but there are many millions who claim to be No. 2.

• • •

It's a funny sort of combination, but the man who paints a town red often gets a black eye during the performance.

• • •

There are very few fools in this world. They generally have enough sense left to consider others more afflicted than themselves.

• • •

Of course, there may be method in the madness of some women who are continually putting their hands on their back hair. It might fall off.

• • •

Thus far the summer has been quite in keeping with the prohibition act. It is a little moist, but infernally dry.

• • •

We intended to say it, but an exchange beat us to it. It says the stock of June brides was small in quantity, but that the deficiency was made up in quality.

• • •

If you find it impossible to get rid of potato bugs in any other way you might squirt a little modern booze over the tops. Even a p. b. couldn't survive that stuff.

• • •

After all, there is a bond of sympathy between doctors and editors. The one doesn't care to take his own medicine, while the other seldom follows his own advice.

• • •

Congress very properly threw the books into that medicinal beer suggestion — or possibly it wasn't medicine, after all. At any rate we can't afford to have a nation of invalids.

ADMIRAL SIMS

ADMIRAL SIMS, who was reprimanded by the Secretary of the Navy for his famous speech in England, has broken out again — fortunately.

In a Fourth of July speech he calls attention to the fact that officers of the Army and Navy are forbidden to criticise publicly any feature of our system of national defense.

The result of their silence, declares the admiral, is that we are in a perpetual state of practical defenselessness, and the vital points of this defenselessness is carefully kept from the public at large, who might themselves criticise if they were cognizant of the actual facts.

Public criticism serves to bring to light the weak spots of every subject under discussion, but in order to expose undesirable conditions a person must first have a thoro knowledge of his subject.

It is admitted that no one can possibly understand the subject of national defense better than the Army or Navy officer, whose life work it is, and yet they are utterly forbidden to discuss such subjects.

As a matter of fact, the civilian heads of departments in Washington, appointed for political reason and without previous knowledge or training, are loath to have their mistakes aired in public by men who know more than they do.

That is all very well for the department head who is endeavoring to head off adverse criticism of himself and his department, but it is poor consolation for the tax payer who pays for these mistakes.

Whatever may be the right or wrong of the admiral's famous speech in England, he is unquestionably right in this instance.

More competent criticism and less official and congressional bungling is greatly to be desired.

POSSIBLE, BUT NOT PROBABLE

A NOTED Japanese statesman says that if the President of the United States will call a congress of nations for the purpose of discussing international disarmament, Japan will promptly respond, and that such an act would go far toward the elimination of all friction between the Americans and the Japanese.

It is possible, but not probable.

The one great outstanding ambition of the Japanese is social equality, and this involves the unrestricted right to intermarriage. That we cannot grant, much as we might desire to meet them in a friendly spirit.

Again, why should the United States be the power to call such a congress.

We are an isolated people, with nothing to gain by interfering in the affairs of the old world, and no desire to do so.

We are practically disarmed as it is, while the nations across the water are spending huge sums in building up a system of national defense.

If Japan is eager for international disarmament, why does not the mikado take the initiative in such a movement? We know of no government that is more feverishly augmenting its fighting ability than the one that sits at Tokio.

Some nations, it seems, are averse to taking their own medicine.

CUTTING OUT THE WASTE

IF General Dawes, as head of the federal budget, can inaugurate a system whereby the extravagant governmental waste will be elminated, he will have performed a great and signal service to his country.

"Governmental waste" is a household expression from ocean to ocean and from Canada to the Gulf. It signifies a lack of organization, inefficiency, and a spirit of don't care. It is time to eliminate the three.

The burdens of taxation are heavy enough when even legitimate expenses are met, without adding the millions and millions that are squandered thru lack of good judgment and business acumen.

General Dawes is by no means a new broom, but we are rather of the opinion that he will nevertheless make a clean sweep.

CONGRESS APPROPRIATES

CONGRESS appropriates the money necessary for conducting the affairs of the government of the United States. That money comes from the pockets of the people.

The President has the right to veto an appropriation bill as a whole, but he can not veto an objectionable item of expenditure in that bill and yet approve the remainder.

Presidents are often called upon to approve appropriation bills that contain items of expenditure that are very obnoxious to a great class of the people, items which they consider prejudicial to the welfare of the country as a whole, that serve but little purpose, and that are forced into the bill at the last minute upon demand of some powerful politician who has an axe to grind.

If the President disapproves the bill because of the one objectionable item he jeopardizes the affairs of government, for without funds the government can not function.

On the other hand, if he approves any portion of the bill he must approve all of it, including the objectionable feature.

While we are changing our budget system we should advance even further and expand the veto prerogative.

The President should not be held personally responsible for conditions that are above and beyond his control.

RELIEF IN SIGHT?

IF a settlement of the Irish question is made that will be reasonably satisfactory to both sides it will be one great relief not only to them, but to the people of the United States as well.

Our country to-day is practically divided into two camps on the subject — a minority of ardent champions of the Irish cause, and a majority who believe in letting countries on the other side of the water manage their own affairs without interference from us.

It is a source of uneasiness to many professional politicians, who want to keep in the good graces of their Irish constituents, yet fear to alienate the support of those in the other camp. It keeps them wiggling and squirming in an attempt to say something and yet at the same time say nothing.

We have had one great division of principle in this country. We do not want another.

The Irish question can not be amicably adjusted any too soon to suit our Uncle Samuel.

AIDING DEMPSEY

NOW that Mr. Dempsey has knocked out the champion prize fighter of Europe it is considered improbable by many that there will be any other puncher willing to take him on.

That would be sad for Dempsey.

Having achieved fame greater than that of any king or emperor, it is not to be considered that he would sink to the level of a mere moving picture star in order to remain in the fickle public eye, which so often forgets its heroes.

What, then, can we do to aid Mr. Dempsey?

Let him enter the ring and punch himself in the absente of any other opponent?

Not at all. Those powerful blows might hurt.

There remains but one other suggestion worthy of a gentleman of the prowess of Mr. Dempsey.

Pull off another war with some foreign country.

Mobilize the flower of our young manhood and send them away to do or die, or both.

Let the red blood of America flow as the waters of the sea, with the super-blood of Mr. Dempsey anchored safely in the harbor of a shipyard.

It is undignified to fight and run away. Therefore, the great of the earth should not fight at all where sprinting may become an urgent necessity.

A the ship yard turns out noble palaces of the deep.

It is a convenient place for Mr. Dempsey to turn in.

Adieu, Jackie!

DOWN THEY GO AGAIN!

The Burrows National Bank has just had installed on their vault door an Anakin Burglar Proof Locking Device which re-looks the door and keeps the burglars out when same has been attacked by either an acetylene torch or nitro-glycerine.

This bank is one of the first to have installed this modern equipment in this section.

In the past eighteen months this device has saved forty-nine banks that have been attacked by burglars.

Reportorial

—Just plain ability is a mighty good quality.

—E. T. Rogers, who recently returned home from Texas, is ill with malaria fever.

—St. Patricks Parish of Belfast will hold an Old Home Day and Summer Festival August 17th.

—Merle Simons, of Wellsville, caught a brown trout in Dyke Creek, last week, that weighed six pounds.

—Many fields of oats in Orleans County are so short that they will be harvested with mowers and horse-rakes.

—Miss Jane Adams, of Chicago, was unanimously elected president of the International Womens Congress, at Vienna, July 18th.

—Archie Bloss has been unable to be at his place in the Bloss Grocery the past week on account of a severe time with an ulcerated tooth.

—The Andover Base Ball Club goes to Cuba Saturday afternoon to play their team. Cuba has a fast nine and is classed as semi-professional.

—The Empire Gas & Fuel Co. finished their sixth dry hole this week, in an effort to produce more gas. This well was drilled between Birdsall and Almond.

—Emmett Merril, of Belmont, was thrown from a load of hay, when the fork unhooked, with great force to the ground injuring his back and arm severely.

—The Wellsville Hospital announces the following as visiting hours, 10 to 12 in the morning, 2 to 4 in the afternoon, and 7 to 8 o'clock in the evening.

—Sodus fruit growers, who sold their sweet cherry crop this year for 15 cents a pound declare that the same fruit went to the consumers at 60 cents a pound.

—Hon. Wm. Duke, Jr. and family, of Wellsville, start for New York Saturday from which place they sail Monday for France, to visit his parents, who reside in that country.

—A barn on the farm of Wm. Waite of Centerville, was struck by lightning last week and burned together with a horse, cow, calves and a quantity of hay and farm machinery.

—Allen G. Straight, a former newspaper man at Olean, has been detailed for duty from the United States Secret Service, as a member of the squad to act as personal bodyguard for President Harding.

—A card from Prin. Levi R. Tubbs mailed from Stainford, Catskill Mts., N. Y., tells us it is a pretty village, at an elevation of about 1900 in the Catskills. Mr. Tubbs writes that he is having a delightful vacation.

—Miss Angeline Brundage, of Hornell, has purchased a home at Alfred and moved thereto. Mrs. Brundage was formerly Miss Angeline Stanley and well known in this village where she was a pupil in the High School.

—Two Olean boys, aged 18 and 19 years, were found observing the cottage of C. J. Reeland of Bolivar, at Cuba Lake last week, which they had broken into, using the cottage and even renting out the boat. The state troopers were summoned, and the boys put under arrest. They were found guilty of the most serious of the offenses committed at the lake for years.

—Lee Trowbridge improved his residence by a fresh coat of paint.

—Sunday afternoon the fast Fillmore ball team plays on the Andover diamond.

D. C. White, of Whitesville, had his arm broken while starting his automobile one evening of last week.

—Owners of dogs who fail to obtain licenses in compliance with the dog licensing law are liable to prosecution with a penalty of $10 and costs under an amendment enacted by the last Legislature and now in effect. Under the old law unlicensed dogs were liable to seizure, but in spite of this many were without license. Under the amended law the owner is made responsible.

—Mrs. George Ayrault, of Perry, N. Y., a patient at the Wellsville Sanitarium was found dead near the R. R. bridge at Scio, Saturday p. m. Mrs. Ayrault came to Wellsville a week previous, and while in a nervous condition, gave no indications of insanity. The nurse left her in bed at 8 p. m. Friday and she was not seen again until her body was found where she had evidently been killed by Erie train 5. One of the patents claims to have heard some one leave the building about 3 a. m., but gave it no special thot. Deceased was 53 years of age.

—Ray Rodgers, 35 years of age, of Penn Yan, and two daughters, Ruth and Helen 11 and 13 years old, were drowned in Lake Keuka, last Monday. The Rodgers family were enjoying the day by the lake. The two girls were in bathing when a cry came from them for help. Mr. Rdgers was not a good swimmer, but at once plunged into the water and in attempting to rescue them all three were drowned. Mrs. Rodgers and younger daughter were on the bank. The wife jumped on a raft and made a desperate attempt to reach the three without success.

DIVER TO LOCATE BODIES

Children Who Drowned in Keuka Lake Are Not Yet Found

Penn Yan, July 20. — In an effort to recover the bodies of Ruth and Helen Rodgers, drowned Sunday afternoon near the Dr. Ross property, on the east side on Keuka Lake, a sea diver is coming from Rochester this afternoon with a complete deep water diving apparatus.

Since Sunday afternoon, when Ray H. Rodgers, of this place and Elmira, was drowned in an attempt to save the lives of his two daughters, scores of volunteer workers have been dragging that section of Keuka Lake where the children were drowned. Dynamite was used in an effort to bring the bodies to the surface, but in vain.

The body of Mr. Rodgers is at the undertaking parlors of Thayer and Waldo on Jacob Street, but it is expected that later his remains will be taken to the family home on Stark Avenue. The triple drowning accident occurred shortly before 6 o'clock Sunday afternoon and altho diligent search has been continually made, both day and night for the bodies, yet nothing has been revealed to indicate where the bodies are at the present time. It is believed that they might have sunk into a deep hole at the bottom of the lake as it is not thot the undercurrent is strong enough at the place where the accident ocurred to cause the two bodies to float away very far.

At the time of the triple drowning accident Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers, the parents of Ray H. Rodgers, who was drowned were away, the mother being in Buffalo and the father in one of the southern states. They have both been notified of the triple drowning accident and are expected to reach their home by to-morrow at least. Until they reach home no definate arrangements will be made for the funeral.

A Yellow Peril.

"Can you read your laundry mark? T. Philip Terry, author of "Terry's Guide to Japan," tells the following joke on himself—a joke which emphasized the advisability of keeping on good terms with one's Chinese laundryman. The Chink in Mr. Terry's home town was inclined to be surly; so one day the guide book writer lectured him on the subject of courtesy, and urged him to adopt civility as a habit. The admonition palpably displeased the celestial, but he said nothing. Later Mr. Terry, who lived several years in China and knows something of the language, was surprised to find his shirts and collars marked with the Cantonese hieroglyph signifying "upstart jackass."

Better Than Alarm Clock.

Instead of leaving word at a hotel desk for an early morning call, there is now a new call system which enables guests to call themselves at any desired hour. A system of electric clocks is the newest hotel installation. The guest simply sets an indicator at night, somewhat similar to an alarm clock and a low musical chime rings at the desired time. The clocks have no faces, dials and hands so that the room can be used in the dark.

Fashion Dictates Fast Thinking

Tight Feminine Fashions Will not be Tolerated by Law, even though Prison Sentence be Inflicted, was the Opinion of Prof. Junaba Fazel of the Queen's University of Teheran, who Addressed Members of the California Club Recently on the Feminine Movement in Persia.

While some American and English women were being imprisoned for asking for the suffrage, their progressive sisters in Persia were filling the prisons because they insisted on leaving off the veil. The unveiled because such a majority that the jails in Persia were overcrowded and in despair the government acquiesced. That women may appear on the streets of Persia without the veil imposed by the state religion is regarded over there as a great triumph in the emancipation of womanhood.

Professor Fazel, who holds the chair of philosophy in the only university for women in Persia, spoke in musical Persian, his sentences being interpreted as he went along by Mirza Ahmad Sohrub, former secretary of the Persian legation at Washington, and likewise a believer in the emancipation of the women of the Orient. Both are followers of the Bahia philosophy, through the teachings of which the Persian women attained what independence of thought and action they enjoy today.

According to the Persian savant, it is the destiny of women to become members of the congresses and parliaments of all the countries of the world.—San Francisco Chronicle.

ROME HOME OF GLUTTONS

Table of Ancient Emperor Vitellius Said to Have Cost Him $1,500 Every Day.

Very little is known of the food of the ancient Egyptians, authorities say, after explaining that the dwellers in the Nile valley were so fond of their cabbage that they deified it.

The Romans raised a great hurroo about the art of the Athenian cooks, they captured, history records. But the delicate aroma of the Grecian pot was never meant to satisfy the thick Roman palate. Rome, in its pursuit of physical pleasure, discarded its cabbage and sought for rare and delicate viands. Pollio, it is said, fed the flesh of human slaves to his fowls to invest their meat with a new savor. Emperor Vitellius' daily market expense was $15,000. At one banquet he dispensed 2,000 kinds of rare fish and 7,000 bird species. His table cost him $20,000,000 for one four-month period. To arouse their jaded appetites, it is written, the Romans ate brains of humming birds, tongues of nightingales and roes of the rarest fish.

Testimentary to the skill of the Grecian cook is the story of the fish which was so much of a sport and artist that he smiled in admiration in the face of the chef who was frying him so deftly and with such flavor.

Strive to Excel.

You are not true to yourself when you are satisfied with doing what others have done. You may by nature be fitted for very much greater work than your neighbors. You may also be short on some points wherein they are strong. In either case it would not be fair to measure yourself by them. There are certain things you can surpass in. In these you should greatly excel if you attain your possibilities. So measure yourself in the light of your ability and the opportunities offered by the problem. Then put yourself to the task of lifting off 100 per cent efficiency in every attempt. Of course you will find it hard. If it were not, every lad in the community would be doing what you are trying to do. So look for results and see that you get them.—Exchange.

Tractors in Arctic.

Tractors are crawling over the snowfields of northern Greenland with supplies of the Lange Koch polar expedition. At last the dog team of the Eskimo has a partial substitute. With their adaptable caterpillar tread, the tractors, like the army tanks, are able to negotiate sharp grades and even wallow over obstacles, along their trackless course. Not that the picturesque dog is to be altogether displaced. For heavy transportation the tractor is useful, but when it comes to the mails the dog teams will still be an essential of the rural delivery service in the land of the igloo.

Novel "Touring Cars."

Tours of the battlefields of France are now made by means of "road pullmans" which are very commodious trailers hitched onto the rear of a powerful touring car, and in this the traveler eats and sleeps. A party of six persons can be accommodated easily on one of these cars, and if they are willing to crowd in, a few more may be taken along.

Training Mine Rescuers.

The United States government maintains nine railroad cars traveling among the miners of the country, teaching them first aid, mine rescue and other things which are likely to be of special interest to them. In addition to this there are trains maintained to rush to the aid of miners who may be injured, or trapped in mines.
