Memoir of Harriet Robinson

Harriet Deming, daughter of Lyman and Polly Deming was born in the town of Alfred N. Y., March 28, 1835, and was united in marriage to Stephen P. Robinson, February 15, 1852 by Rev. Jason Hunt.

They had four children, Arthur L., who died, October, 14, 1882, Mrs. Ida M. Wiles, of Elmira, N. Y., Charles A. Robinson, and Mrs. L. A. Burrows of Andover N. Y. Mrs. Robinson united with the Andover Methodist Episcopal church, early in life. The record is defective in that it does not show the exact date. She remained a faithful and consistent member of the church to the end of her life. She and her husband were greatly interested in the construction of the present church edifice, and gave largely of their means toward its completion.

Her interest in the cause continued unabated to the end of her life.

About three months before her death it became evident that she was suffering from a form of heart disease, which gradually became more acute until the end came.

The earlier part of her married life was spent in the towns of Alfred, Almond and Greenwood.

In 1868, she and her family moved to a farm situated one mile west of the Village of Andover, now owned and occupied by her son Charles. She and her family lived on this farm for a number of years, moving into the Village of Andover in 1902, living with her daughter, Mrs. L. A. Burrows until the time of her death, which occured, Sunday September 26, 1909. It was Mrs. Robinsons special request that her funeral services be held at her late residence, and that they should be brief and simple, without any ostentation. The service was conducted by her pastor consisting prayer, scripture lesson and a brief address. Interment was made in Valley Brook cemetery, there to await the resurrection morning.

Memoir Of Felton S. Robinson

Felton S. Robinson was born in the Town of Independence, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1842. He lived in that vicinity during the early years of his life. He was married to Frances A. Coston, Apr. 9, 1865, and lived in Greenwood three years after his marriage. From there he moved to the farm in the town of Andover, where he remained until the time of his death, excepting one year during which he lived in the village of Andover. It was while residing in Andover that his wife died. After her death he returned to his farm, about five years ago.

Two children were born to them. The eldest, a daughter who died about twenty years ago and Emmett, a son, resides on the homestead.

Felton Robinson united with the Andover Methodist church in 1870 and lived a faithful member of it until the end of his life. Which occured, Sept. 21, 1909. The primary cause of his death was the kick of a horse. After being hurt as above stated he lingered for about a week. His condition gradually became more critical, owing to other complications appearing.

After recovering from the nerveous shock caused by the accident he seemed to realize that he was nearing the end of his earthly life. He called his son, Emmett to him and said. "I may not recover from this and now while my mind is clear I want to tell you some things about my business matters." This he did. Having done so, he seemed to bid adieu to all earthly things, and calmly awaited the message calling him hence. Felton Robinson was a very quiet and retiring person. His manly qualities would not be fully appreciated on a brief acquaintance. He was conservative, yet liberal minded.

He was among the first to give toward the building of a new Methodist parsonage. This he did freely and largely. Not only did he give generously himself, but urged others to do so.

Mr. Robinson was a regular attendent at the church of his choice. It was an inspiration to his pastor to see him in his pew every Sunday morning. His religious life was not of the demonstrative type, but like the deep stream it was constant and full.

His funeral services were held in the Andover Methodist Church, conducted by the pastor. Interment was made in Valleybrook cemetery. Thus ended the earthly life of a manly man, an honored citizen, a true Christian.
