HENRY C. COLEMAN.

The Sudden Passing of Another Respected Citizen, Saturday

With a smile upon his lips and in the companionship of his family Henry C. Coleman suddenly dropped dead, Saturday afternoon, of heart disease, aged 73 years.

For a number of years Mr. Coleman had been afflicted with heart disease indeed, ever since his return from the service for his country in 1865 it has troubled him more or less. It was a well understood fact that when the time came. Mr. Coleman's life would end as it did, but as his health was evidently better this fall than it had been in months previous, his friends were not prepared for the terrible blow, which his sudden death inflicted.

Mr. Coleman had stopped at the shop of his son on First street on his way home, for a little chat, and while joking with them suddenly swayed, and would have dropped to the floor only for the protecting arms of those with whom he was conversing. He was dead when he fell. A physician was just entering the home of a next-door neighbor and was at his side in less than three minutes, but life was extinct.

Henry J. C. Coleman was born in Siddaxshousen, between the cities of Hanover and Brunswick, Germany, July 11, 1836, and was the eldest son of Christopher and Marie A. Kuhlmann. When a lad of 15 years the family removed to this country, settling in Canadea, in this county.

One reason for coming to America was that the parents desired to avoid the necessity of their boys being obliged to serve in the standing army as is obligatory upon every young man in that empire. But at the opening of the Civil War in this country, one of the first volunteers was Henry Coleman, and a year late his younger brother, John enlisted. Henry Coleman enlisted in Company "A", 85 N. Y. Volunteers, and served three years. Several month of which time was passed in southern prisons.

When a young man Mr. Coleman became an experienced saw mill engineer, and went to work for a large concern at Little Genesee, in that occupation, and was employed with them for many years. During this time he met Miss Addie Green, and on April 28, 1869, they were united in marriage.

Their home has been an unusually happy one. They have lived in Canaedea, Little Genesee, Alfred, Independence and the last thirteen years in Andover, and have many warm friends in all of these places. Last April they celebrated their golden wedding at their home in this village.

Henry Coleman received his schooling in Germany, under the direction of the Lutheran Church, where he was confirmed just prior to coming to America. He never had the advantage of even a term of school in this country, but was a great reader and there are few people better read than was he. He was an industrious hard working and upright man and citizen, having the respect and confidence of all with whom he had associated from his youth until the lamp of life was so suddenly extinguished, last Saturday.

He was a good man, a kind and loving husband and father, and a loyal friend to all. Contrary to the general rule with people who have passed the age of middle life, Henry Coleman has been loyal to all of the interests of Andover, ever since he came here to make his home, giving freely for her industrial prosperity both of his means and moral support, even though he fully realized that it could never be of financial benefit to himself.

Besides his wife he leaves two daughters, Mrs. Flora Fay of Wellsville, and Mrs. Fannie Backus of Andover, and one son, Luther C. Coleman of this village, and one brother, John Coleman of Olean.

Funeral services were held at the residence on Chestnut street, Monday afternoon, Rev. I. L. Cottrell of Alfred Station, an old friend and neighbor, officiating, assisted by Mr. R. J. Severance, pastor of the Andover Seventh-day Baptist church Edward Seaman Post, G. A. R. and Ladies of Relief Corps, attending the services in a body. Being borne to its last resting place by his comrades. Interment was in Valley Brook Cemetery.

Birthday Surprise.

A pleasant surprise was given Mrs. Frank Platts, Monday evening at her home on Rochambeau Avenue by twenty-four of her friends in remembrance of her birthday. A very enjoyable evening was spent in playing games, after which light refreshments were served.

Her many friends departed for their homes at a late hour, after wishing her many happy returns of the day.

The little play, embellished with many songs, dances, choruses, has made a fortune for its owners, and continues to be a success from every point of view. An excellent company, headed by Master Reed as Buster, and Jack Bell as Tige, will appear at the Auditorium, Thursday, Dec. 16.
