About ten days since a new well was struck on the Hayes Farm, the yield of which is thirty barrels daily.

A thirty-five barrel well was struck on the Atkinson Farm Upper Cherry Run, on Friday last.

The boiler of the Carson and McDowell well, on the Pittsburgh and Cherry Run tract, exploded, on Saturday night, tearing the engine house and derrick to pieces, but fortunately no person was hurt.

On Monday a new well on the west side of Oil Creek, near McClintockville, was struck about a week previous and is producing about twenty five barrels daily, connected to the surface by a pipe of ninety barrels, and maintained that rate during the day.

The Oil can Times says that the oil well sunk a considerable time since by Mr. Job Moses near Limestone, operations upon which have been suspended until recently, has at last yielded to the longing desires of the public and last Saturday, as we are informed, produced 6 barrels of oil in five hours time.

The old Harmonical well No. 9, on the Armstrong Farm, Pleasantville, which was drilled to the sixth sand rock about a year ago, and which produced a small quantity of green oil for some time, was recently drilled deeper and torpedoesd. It is now producing ten barrels of green oil daily.

On Wednesday of last week a new well was struck on the McClintockville Petroleum Company's tract, near the line of the Shaw Farm. It is producing at the rate of twenty five or thirty barrels per day. The working interest is owned by Messrs. F. W. Andrews and O. D. Harrington.

priso well No. 2 was struck. This well commenced to produce at the rate of twenty-five barrels daily, but the yield has since increased, and is now about sixty barrels per day.

Parker's Landing.—The Venango Oil Company says there is, perhaps, more development going on at Parker's Landing than in any three other oil territories in the oil regions. It is said a continuous line of derricks skirt the bank of the river for two or three miles, most of which are in active operation, and in process of drilling. It will not be long before this territory will either be bored to death and exhausted, or prove to be an extensive oil producing locality. At present, everything looks favorable to its success.

The sum of $200,000 has been subscribed to the fund for carrying out the proposed world's fair to be held here in 1871. This amount was contributed by about 25 of the leading business men of New York city.

Two construction trains on the Western Pacific Railroad came in collision on Friday, near Lybants Station. Two locomotives and five cars were demolished. No lives were lost. A dense fog caused the accident.

Two attempts were made to throw a train from the track near Suscook, N. H., on Friday night, by piling sleepers on the track, but the obstructions were discovered in time to prevent any damage.

The fat man's joke is getting to be serious. There is a man in Hoboken, N. The Troy Whig enumerates the following bequest made in the will of the late Gen. Wool.

During his lifetime Gen. Wool accumulated property to the extent of $650,000, most of which is in available means. It is said that a large portion of his property he has bequeathed to his nephews and nieces. His homestead, library, paintings, etc., valued with a bequest of $35,000 at about $100,000, he leaves his nephew and namesake, John Wool Griswold. He also appropriates $50,000 for the erection of a monument to Mrs. Wool and himself at Oakwood. He also makes the following public bequest: Fifteen thousand dollars to the Rensselaer Polytechnic institute; $3,000 to the Troy orphan asylum; $2,000 to the day home; $2,000 to the catholic orphan asylum; $5,000 to Williams college.

Gen. Wool remarked to his son "Samuel," "be aware of vidders." The advice is wholesome, says the Lawrence Journal. "Widows are cunning creatures. They know the ropes and drag in the susceptible members of the masculine persuasion, when only modest and blushing young damsels, though covered with beauty and glory as with a garment, would be utterly powerless to create an impression."

Here is a little bit of legal counsel and advice for widows about to marry. The Supreme Court at Cincinnati has decided that a man has a right to restrain his wife from a second marriage by making his bequest dependent upon her remaining a widow. The text of the decision is as follows:

"Mrs. George Ripley married Frank Lingers, although her husband's will warned her that she must lose the use of the property he had bequeathed to her, and must give it up to their children. She then sued the children for her dower. The court decided that she was not entitled to it. For, when the will was admitted to probate, she elected to take the whole property under the will as devised to her, instead of the dower secured by law. Had she chosen the dower she would not have forfeited it by the second marriage. Her husband cannot defeat that by alienation during his life nor by his devise at death. But the court ruled that a husband has an interest in his wife's widowhood, and when he makes her the recipient of his bounty it may be well supposed that he has an interest in her future happiness, and desires to prevent her from forming an unhappy union. He can hardly be presumed willing to favor his generosity on somebody he never knew, and has a right to keep his children from the control and counsel of one whose sole motive for marriage with the widow may have been a mercenary one. Moreover, he cannot be supposed anxious to enrich or support the miserable children of a second marriage. As the widow chooses to take the whole property under the will, subject to the conditions mentioned, instead of taking her legal dower, she waived all claims to the dower, and cannot recover it now."
