Railroads and Government

THE movement for government ownership of railroads appears to be gaining headway in Washington. The President has declared himself as opposed to it, but the pressure on Congress to enact a Federal ownership law is increasing. The Railway Labor Executives Association is for it. President William Green of the American Federation of Labor he declared in favor of the plan. And some of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, including Joseph C. Eastman, see no way out for the roads than to have the Government buy them and assume responsibility for their operation.

Commissioner Eastman some time ago worked out a comprehensive plan whereby a Federal corporation, to be known as United States Railways, would be formed to take over the lines. The management of the corporation would be in the hands of five trustees, three named by the President, two by holders of railway securities, aided by a group of 24 unpaid advisers representing business, agriculture, labor and other interests.

Under the Eastman plan, which is the basis of present discussion of the subject, the United States Railways would at once take over all the roads, on a rental basis until a fair price for each property could be determined. Once a price was agreed upon, the settlement would be partly in debenture bonds, guaranteed by the Federal Government, and partly in preferred stock, to give present railroad security holders a chance to benefit from future earnings. The price to be paid would be based not upon the costs of the railroads to their present owners but upon their record of earnings.

There is no question but that the railroads of the United States are in a desperate situation. Thirty-one per cent of all railroad mileage is in receivership. More than 2,500,000,000 of railroad bond issues is in default. The railroads are losing business to other kinds of transportation which they could have, if organized business ground.

In spite of all that, however, the Federal ownership proposal is one which should not be adopted hastily. There are many dangers, not the least of which is that under political control the railroad system would be [illegible] Politics is Government.

Wisdom From Youth

SOME time ago a high school class in a farming community was asked to write essays on various farming problems. One boy wrote, in part: "Two things are necessary to help dairymen. First, farmers need better organization; second, farmers need more education about marketing problems."

That is as true as it is simple, and it applies to all other branches of agriculture. Farmers who scientifically develop and serve markets, and who are represented by well financed, efficiently managed and loyally supported marketing organizations are in the long run, prosperous and progressive farmers. They will face fewer periods of crisis than other, disorganized farmers—and in good times and bad they will earn a better livelihood. Marketing co-operation simply means putting agriculture on a business basis, which eliminates hit-and-miss methods, and so far as possible guarantees that the producer will have a profitable market for what he raises.

At a recent fancy-dress ball the first prize was won by a man who represented a plumber. He forgot to come.

Abolish Tax Exemptions

THERE will be general agreement, except among those whose pocketbooks are directly affected, with the proposal laid before Congress by the President that no more Federal bond issues should exempt their holders from income taxes on the interest which the Government pays them, and that the rule of exempting state and Federal government salaries from income taxation should be abolished.

Tax exempt bonds were devised in World War times to induce people to lend money to the Government at low rates of interest. There seems to be no good reason why such an inducement should be offered in peace times.

On the taxation of salaries, Constitutional questions are involved. The Income Tax amendment to the Constitution authorizes Congress to tax incomes "from whatever source derived." But for more than 125 years the Supreme Court has held that the independent sovereignties of the states and the Federal Government are inviolate, and that neither may tax or interfere with the instrumentalities of the other. Under that principle the Federal Government may not tax the salaries of State employees, nor the states which impose income taxes levy such upon Federal salaries.

This is mainly an inequitable exemption of workers in the public service, whose incomes generally are higher than those of persons similarly employed in private occupations. Federal employees pay the Federal income tax, and state employees pay their state income taxes, if any. But there is no good reason why the four or five millions on state payrolls should not pay the same proportionate Federal taxes as those who have no political jobs.

It may take another Constitutional amendment to bring it about, but the President's proposal should be put into effect.

Speaking of the Weather

I AM sure that the weather has contributed more to the ease of social relationships than any other conversational subject. And if it is a good subject, it is not merely because it is a universal and infallible means of breaking the silence; it is also because it is fundamentally a difficult subject, calling the wits into immediate action. It is a subject which is no sooner broached than you have to devise some means of escaping from it. If by the end of three sentences you have not made the transition to some other topic, you may find yourself sinking in a perfect morass of comparisons between one wet day and other, or between one wet summer and another, without hope of escape. That is why many conversations die hard in some easy exhibition, like plays at the moment national acquaintances, or places visited.

Two human beings, meeting for the first time are, as a rule, like two foreigners, each of whom knows only a few words of the other's language. They almost inevitably begin with the simplest phrases and at the simplest hence. It is better on being introduced to someone tell him it is cold day or a warm day, unless you know this already. If [illegible] Mr. Doffle's [illegible] is bringing [illegible] to the Welland Valley.

Another thing that makes French politics so confusing is the name of the party currently in power. For instance, the London Daily Mail had a headline: "Popular Front is Back."

In the last few years many a college athlete has continued, long after graduation, to be a three letter man: I. O. U.

A girl may wear a golf shirt and never play golf, or wear a bathing suit and never go near the water—but when she puts on a wedding gown look, she means business.

We know a man who puts his money under his pillow every night so that he can have enough to retire on.

In this age of super-efficiency, it is somehow refreshing to hear of the plight of the coal ship Ida Hay. She sent a radio to the Coast Guard to come to her rescue off the Delaware coast. She was out of coal.

HOW, WHAT AND WHY?

Special to the Andover News

The Andover News has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one postcard. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

R. W. F., wants to know what to do about some small insects he has seen on his hydrangeas.

Dr. W. E. Blauvelt of the entomology department replies: "The pests on your hydrangeas may be the clover mite, or the greenhouse red spider mite.

"Both may be killed by spraying the plants with a solution of one of the rotenone spray materials, of which many are on the market. Since the different brands vary in strength, dilute them according to directions on the container.

"Give particular attention to spraying the under side of the leaves where the mites feed. If you do not have a hand sprayer, you can mix a basin full of the solution and dip the tops of the plant in this, or make up a small amount of the solution and swab it on the under side of the leaves with a wad of cotton batting."

What Alfalfa Yields

N. L. writes: "Please send me full information about alfalfa. What should the first three cuttings yield to the acre?"

Professor G. H. Serviss of the agronomy department answers: "The average yield of alfalfa to the acre in New York State is about two and one half tons a year. This includes yields on poor as well as on good soils, and on fields that are cut once, twice and three times."

"Less than one-half of the hay will usually be harvested in the first cutting. In some years from three to four tons of hay will be harvested from an acre of good alfalfa while other years the yield may not be more than one half of that. It all depends on the season."

Collector's Notice

TAKE NOTICE: I the undersigned, Clerk of the Village of Andover, New York, have received the tax roll and warrant for the collection of taxes levied for the present year and I will attend at the office of the Village Clerk in the village office building in said village on June 1st and until July 1st except Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, from 9 o'clock in the forenoon until 4 o'clock in the afternoon of each such days, for the purpose of receiving taxes assessed upon such roll.

For such period of time taxes may be paid to me without additional charge and on all such taxes remaining unpaid until after July 1st five per centum will be added for the first month and an additional one-half of one per centum for each month and fraction thereof thereafter until paid.

Dated May 25, 1938.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, rheumatic pains, tiredness, "under the weather" feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been used by friends for more than forty years. They have a nationwide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

CATHERINE THE GREAT

She Ruled an Empire, Married an Embecile, and Had a Score of Lovers.

Catherine The Great was the most famous Empress that ever sat upon the glittering throne of Russia.

Yet her real name was not Catherine. And she was not Russian. And some historians don't even think she was great.

When she came to Russia, she was a nobody—a little poverty-stricken German princess who had been reared like a ragamuffin. She arrived in Russia, friendless and penniless, and with only three dresses to her name. Yet she managed to marry the Grand Duke Peter, the heir to the throne of all the Russians. But Peter didn't amount to much. He was a driveling imbecile. His face was pitted and marked with the ravages of small-pox, and he used to go to bed with his boots on. Even after he became Czar, he got drunk with his own servants, took a whip and beat his soldiers with his own hands, and lay on the floor for hours at a time, playing with wax dolls dressed in military uniform.

He despised her, and she loathed him. So she staged a revolt, kicked him off the throne, and had one of her lovers put arsenic in his vodka.

But he was so tough that even arsenic couldn't kill him: so Catherine's lover knocked him down and choked him to death by thrusting a napkin down his throat.

Then, for 34 years after that, Catherine ruled one of the greatest empires on earth—ruled over a land inhabited by 50 different races, and she sifted to her "Little Household." She never married again; but she was exactly lonesome. For scores, yes, perhaps hundreds of different lovers danced in the ballroom of her warm and romantic heart. Yet she was so strict with her grandsons that she made them stop studying botany because they asked questions about the reproduction of plants.

She supported her lovers in regal splendor and squandered on them five hundred million dollars. Even the some of them hadn't the least bit of ability, nevertheless she made them generals in the army. She made them generals and plutocrats and premiers. She conquered Poland, made one of her lovers King of Poland. He didn't want to be a king; but she was tired of him and wanted to get rid of him, so she made him a king anyway. Later on she ruined him and brought his gilded throne back to Russia and used it in her bathroom.

Then Catherine the Great fell in love with an ugly giant, bearing the name of Potemkin. Potemkin only had one eye. He had lost the other one in a tavern brawl.

Altho Potemkin lived in a palace glittering with all the splendor and riches of Asia, he went about with nothing but house slippers on his bare feet. His hair was uncombed; and he always needed a bath. He chewed his fingernails; and he ate raw onions and garlic. But Potemkin was a tornado of physical energy, and the mere touch of his hand filled Catherine with a vast and tender happiness. She called him her "golden pheasant," her "pigeon," her "bow-wow."

Her "bow-wow" was one of the greatest generals Russia ever had; and yet he was afraid of the noise of guns and trembled like a school girl whenever a cannon was fired.

Altho Catherine was the richest woman in the world, she ate only two meals a day; and almost anyone in America of modest income enjoys better cooked food than Catherine the Great often had. She had her dinners served on plates of gold; yet if the cook burned the meat she merely laughed and ate it just the same.

Time Soon Here To Harvest Hay

Time for harvesting the first hay crop of the season will soon be here. Altho hay is the most important dairy feed grown on New York dairy farms, much of its feeding value may be lost because of late cutting or of unfavorable weather.

Making hay into silage, when bad weather prevents the making of the crop into good hay, is likely to become a standard practice in the state. This practice is encouraged if dairymen are equipped to handle and ensile green, early-cut hay.

Nearly 400 northeastern dairymen supplied information for a new Cornell bulletin on methods of making and preserving silage from legumes and grasses. During poor haying weather, any crop may be ensiled with the knowledge that it will be preserved with a small fraction of the loss common to haymaking.

To prevent decomposition, some preserving material is used with legume hays and early-cut grass hays. Molasses and phosphoric acid were both used satisfactorily last year by farmers.

More information on what these farmers have done and are planning to do is given in the bulletin E-391. Farmers may have single copies free by writing to the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca.
