Common Sense Rules Of Safety Urged

WITH schools reopened thruout the State, Motor Vehicle Commissioner Charles A. Harnett today urged parents to teach their children the "common sense rules of safety."

"Caution them to cross only at intersections, and above all, to look before they cross," the Commissioner said. "See that they travel to school over routes offering some type of traffic control and that they understand the importance of obeying traffic signals. These and similar suggestions may seem overstressed, but they represent the common sense rules of safety."

At the same time, Commissioner Harnett repeated his reminder to motorists that thousands of children will be making the trips between their homes and schools for the first time this year.

"It is not expected that these children will have any great understanding of safety," he said, "but it is expected that motorists will have the intelligence to drive slowly and with every caution near schools and school crossings."

The child death rate in New York State has steadily decreased during the last ten years, it was pointed out. In 1937, but 388 children under 15 years of age were killed by automobiles in comparison with the 618 of the same ages in 1927, a decrease of 230 fatalities.

With safety education now a required subject in all schools, further reductions in the child death rate are anticipated, the Commissioner said.

How Men Progress and Succeed

THE eternal caution for progress and success in life, particularly the adage that opportunity knocks at the door of his brow, holds as true today as ever, in spite of the theories of recent years.

A parent of wisdom of a 100 years ago undoubtedly gave the same advice as a parent of wisdom today. If you let your memories go back to some of the good advice given you in childhood, you will readily recognize the fundamental elements for progress and success given by R. D. Dunkle, director of the manufacturing staff of General Motors, to the graduating classes of the General Motors Institute, recently in Flint, Mich.

"Hard work is still the main characteristic by which men progress and succeed," Mr. Dunkle said. "And always keep in mind that ability to get along with others and to gain their good will is essential to the achievement of any large degree of success in life.

"Many people mistakenly believe that progress is made thru personal consideration, and thru influence, but it is my observation the men who hold the places of importance today, have achieved those places thru sheer weight of their own ability.

"They have progressed by doing the things that come to their hands to do, better. Their progress has not been achieved in one dramatic move. They have accumulated consideration by the successful filling of less important achievements."

Mr. Dunkle's concluding optimism is likewise refreshing: "Industry needs youth, needs its vision, its fresh viewpoint, its courage and enthusiasm, for industry is essentially progressive and only thru constant renewal of creative thought and driving enterprise can it progress."

A fugitive from a Michigan prison was a janitor for 17 years in Chicago before he was detected, which is not bad time at all for locating a janitor.

Get Into the Swim

NEXT month, a week will be given to informing the public of the hazards of one of man's most destructive enemies—uncontrolled fire. Fire Prevention Week, which has been an annual event ever since it was proclaimed by President Wilson more than two decades ago, will begin October 9th and run thru the 15th.

A few vivid figures illustrate the importance of the week. Each year fire destroys about $300,000,000 worth of property directly—and the indirect loss brings the total to the billion-dollar mark. Worse yet, it kills 10,000 people horribly—an average of 27 each day. This is what carelessness, ignorance and incompetence breed.

There isn't a hamlet in the country which won't be reached to some extent thru Fire Prevention Week activities. And there isn't a citizen in the country who can provide a sound alibi if he fails to absorb some of the simple facts and information that are all that is needed to prevent and control most fires. Governors of states and other public officials will take part. Insurance organizations will issue pamphlets, run advertisements in newspapers and periodicals, and prepare window displays. Fire marshals and chiefs will speak. Every media of communication involving the spoken and printed word will be brought into play in a concentrated national effort to make the week a success.

Fire prevention doesn't take much in either time or money and it pays tremendous dividends!

Mark down the date of Fire Prevention Week on your calendar—and get into the swim.

Watch Your Plugs

EVER since the World War, the Government, acting usually thru the Federal Trade Commission, has been cracking down on chiselers who make a business of "reconditioning and selling spark plugs." Apparently they pick up these plugs almost as systematically as the milk man gets his bottles back. The much-used or defective spark plugs are shined up to look like new.

A complaint has just been filed against J. E. Bernard & Company, and the Federal Trade Commission says that in reselling A-C, Champion and other used plugs, that they "were individually wrapped in plain white paper which carried no marking to disclose the used or reconditioned nature of the plug." Some of the plugs were even packed with individual cartons and labeled so that the casual purchaser would have no suspicion that he was buying used goods.

Individual automobile users ought to be able to learn from these repeated warnings, and statements of the Federal Trade Commission, to beware of the chiselers.

Politics on the Air

POLITICAL broadcasting is destined to soon become a good deal of a public nuisance. In a few weeks you will likely find, when you go to a friend's house for a quiet evening, that he will tune in on a radio station and make you listen to a speech by [illegible] to hear [illegible] that you don't want to hear.

Under the new rules of the Federal Communications Commission, there is a provision prohibiting stations from exercising censorship of any speech broadcast by a duly qualified candidate. This opens the way to more mud-slinging than has been permitted on the radio in the past.

While political candidates will have to pay the radio fiddler, the facilities will be open as at present to free programs—and those are frequently the most of all. Goshen Democrat.

For ourselves, let us put up an honest front. For the other fellow, let us give him the benefit of the doubt. He is probably better than he seems. We both may become more than we are.

What's a neat way to turn the conversation when one has said: "There's a typical piece of driving by a woman," and it turns out to be a man?

And in the old days a bad man would go around with niches in his gun handle instead of in his fenders.

"To be happily married," declares a woman novelist, "one must make sacrifices." She doesn't bother to mention which one, of course.

Those newsreel shots of toboggan teams in the Swiss Alps don't prove very much, but at least you get a glimpse of a few Europeans sticking together.

HOW, WHAT AND WHY?

Special to the Andover News

The Andover News has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one postcard. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Locust Killers

J. S. C. writes: "We have suffered a great deal of damage this year from 'locust killers,' a gigantic hornet or wasp-like insect. They have so infested my garden that many plants have been completely undermined and killed.

"They were so numerous that men, who do not fear bees, yellow jackets or even hornets, have been afraid of being attacked. No one, however, has been stung. We have tried various sprays without effect.

"What are these 'killers,' do they sting, and how can I get rid of them?"

Professor R. W. Leiby of the entomology department replies: "The insect is recognized as the Cicada Killer. This insect has the habit of capturing Cicada, often called locust, specimens then paralyzes them with its sting, and drags them to a nest in the ground.

"A new generation, using the Cicada as food, develops the following spring and summer, resulting in an adult wasp.

"The female wasps can sting, but seldom attempt to sting human beings. At the present time no practical means can be suggested to get rid of them, since the insects are not in an immature stage. An insect collecting net may be useless because of the large numbers. The wasps ought to disappear soon if they are not already gone.

The Sawdust

G. H. C. Clinton, asks: "May sawdust be used in the flower and vegetable garden to lighten a heavy soil and to improve the supply of organic matter?

If the sawdust is well rotted in, the only advantage I can think of would be an increase in acidity, but couldn't lime be added to correct this?"

R. C. Allen of the floriculture department answers: "Sawdust is not satisfactory for lightening a heavy soil, as it is in an undecomposed condition and serves as a source of food for soil organisms.

"With an abundance of food, the organisms reproduce and develop rapidly, since they require nitrogen, phosphorus, potash, and other nutrients that compete with the higher plants. As the organic matter decomposes, the soil may lack some food elements, especially nitrogen. It is difficult to overcome this deficiency by the use of fertilizers under garden conditions."

Self-Appointed Committee Urges All to Vote Tuesday

Primary elections are less than a week away. This year, citizens seem to be exhibiting more concern than in years before, regarding the cost of government, local and national.

Recognizing this more interested attitude on the part of voters, a group of prominent residents from various townships have formed a voluntary committee to urge that all citizens take advantage of the opportunity which the primaries offer to get the most able men on the party tickets.

"Frankly, we are primarily interested in the campaign to 'Keep Jones Sheriff'," points out Bayard T. Haskins, a prominent oil producer of Wellsville, one of the committee members.

"For that reason we adopted the name which you have seen at the bottom of our advertisements." (Readers of Allegany county papers will recall the recent advertisements signed by the Jones for Sheriff Committee.)

"Jones, the present sheriff, has established an enviable record and we appreciate the thousands of dollars he has saved the taxpayers since he went into the sheriff's department.

"Jones has proved that a business man can bring economy and efficiency into the business which we voters finance. We think it is to the interest of every taxpayer to take a few minutes Tuesday to vote for Jones and every other competent candidate, to insure that they will be on the ballots in November," concluded Mr. Haskins.

If you have a new canary who refuses to sing there is the possibility that the little creature is simply lonely and lacks inspiration. In such instances, canaries have been known to start singing when a whistling tea kettle is placed on the stove a few times a day and allowed to boil.

For a delicious, jiffy dessert, try Refrigerator Whip: Into 1 cup of whipping cream (whipped), fold ¾ cup of graham cracker crumbs and 1 cup of peach or other preserves. Pile in sherbets and chill. This is a particularly suitable dessert to make up several hours, or a day in advance. And stored in the clean-washed, properly-moist atmosphere of a modern air-conditioned ice refrigerator, this dessert will retain all its delicate flavor and fluffiness until serving time.

Refreshments at a card party can be served with lightning speed by the use of clever table trays or covers that are easily and inexpensively made. Each tray is the size of the card table top, and is made of shellacked composition board, with a one-inch frame or "apron" that fits over the table. Handles are placed on opposite side.

Before the guests arrive each tray is spread with a cloth and completely set with a service for four. Plates of cake and sandwiches, covered with damp cloths, are even put on. Perishable foods are in the refrigerator, all ready to serve. Each tray is then quickly carried in and all the guests are served at once.

For old-time fresh Strawberry Ice Cream: Mix together 1 tablespoon flour, 1½ cups sugar and ½ teaspoon salt. Add one egg, beaten slightly, and 1 pint scalded milk. Cook, stirring constantly, until thickened. Allow to cool. Then add 1 quart coffee cream, 2 cups crushed strawberries and a few drops of red food coloring, blending well.

Pour into freezing container of modern ice cream freezer, filling not more than ⅔ full. Assemble, pack with a mixture of 3 parts of crushed ice and 1 part rock salt. Freeze, for 5 to 10 minutes or until turning becomes difficult. Open, remove dasher and pack down ice cream with a spoon. Replace cover, drain off water and repack with ice and salt mixture. Cover and let stand at least 1 hour. Serves 8 to 10.

THE HOUSE OF HAZARDS By Mac Arthur

H. G. WELLS

If H. G. Wells Hadn't Broken His Leg He Might Still be Clerk in a Drygoods Store

Sixty years ago, a group of boys were playing on the streets of a London suburb when an accident occurred. One of the bigger boys picked up a little chap called Bertie Wells and tossed him high into the air; but instead of catching Bertie when he came down, the big boy dropped him and broke his leg.

For months, Bertie lay writhing in bed with a heavy weight tied to his leg. But the bone didn't set properly. It had to be rebroken. It was a terrible experience. Little Bertie screamed in agony and terror.

That seemed like a tragedy then, but Bertie knows better now. Today he is one of the most famous authors in the world. You know him not as Bertie, but as Herbert George Wells, or H. G. Wells. You have probably read some of his books. He has written over 75 volumes; and he himself admits that that broken leg was perhaps the luckiest thing that ever happened to him. Why? Because it kept him confined to the house for a whole year. He devoured every book he could get, because there was nothing else he could do.

Today, H. G. Wells is one of the highest paid authors on earth. He has probably made a million dollars with his pen; yet he was brought up in pinching poverty.

Finally, the crockery shop failed. The family was desperate, so his mother had to take a job as a housekeeper on a big estate in Sussex. Note this: she lived with the servants, and H. G. Wells often went there to visit her. And it was there that he got his first peep into English social life and he got that from the servants quarters.

The future author of The Outline of History started out in business life at the age of 13 as a drygoods clerk. He had to get up at 5 o'clock, sweep out the store, build the fire, and clerk for 14 hours a day. It was drudgery and he despised it. At the end of one month, the boss fired him because he was untidy and slovenly and troublesome.

He finally got a job clerking in another drygoods store. He had to eat, so this time, he held out a bit longer. But when the floorwalker wasn't looking, he would sneak down into the cellar and read Herbert Spencer.

After two years, he could stand it no longer. So he got up one Sunday morning, and without waiting for breakfast, he tramped 15 miles on an empty stomach to find his mother. He was frantic. He pleaded with her. He swore that he would kill himself if he had to remain in the shop any longer.

Then he wrote a long, pathetic letter to his old school master. Wells told him he was miserable, heartbroken, that he no longer wanted to live.

And the school master, to his utter astonishment, wrote back, offering him a job as a teacher.

Presto! That was another turning point in his life.

A few years after he began teaching, disaster overtook him with the suddenness of an explosion. It happened in this way: He was playing football. In the heat and excitement of the game, he was knocked down, trampled on and almost killed. The doctors gave up all hope; and for months he lived in fear of imminent death. For 12 terrible years after that, he clung to life as a semi-invalid; and yet, during those years, he developed the ability that was to make his name known thruout the civilized world.

For five years he wrote furiously. The books and articles and stories that he turned out were dull and amateurish. And he had the good sense to realize it. So he burned up almost everything he wrote.

Finally, in spite of being half an invalid, he got another job teaching. There was a pretty girl in the biology class. Her name was Catherine Robbins. Presently H. G. Wells found that he was far more interested in Catherine than in biology. She was frail and sickly. So was he. They wanted to grab all the happiness they could, at once. So they were married.

That was 40 years ago; and, instead of dying, Wells regained his strength, turned out to be a human dynamo of energy and has been grinding out two full-length books each year, books that have sent their reverberations around the world.

BANANA IS ONE OF THE OLDEST FOODS

The banana is probably one of the oldest of human foods. Its origin is in doubt. Some authorities say it is native to India and China; others that Columbus found it growing in America. As known today the banana is the result of centuries of cultivation, notes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Bananas were practically unknown in the United States until shortly before the Civil war. Prior to that those reaching American shores were regarded as curiosities. In 1934 some 43,096,000 bunches came into the United States.

Although there are hundreds of varieties of bananas now on the markets, the principal commercial one is the familiar yellow-skinned fruit which comes chiefly from Honduras. Red bananas do not find favor because of their strong flavor.

Few foods can compare with the banana from the standpoint of economy; their average price throughout the past year being but 5 cents a pound. For this small outlay the purchaser gets a good amount of vitamins A, B, C, D, and G; an alkaline forming food; those minerals that are necessary to health, and wrapped in a naturally sanitary package.

The fruit with small brown dots covering the greater portion of its surface is riper than the clear yellow banana.

They should never be kept in an ice box, as this ruins the flavor and prevents maturing. One of the best methods is to place them in a paper bag with a string tied tightly about the opening, and hang them in a moderately cool room.

Cigar Tastes Corrected by Proper Soil Treatment

The poor taste and aroma of some cigars can be corrected by proper soil treatment, according to the Connecticut agricultural experiment station.

"Experienced cigar smokers," said Dr. P. J. Anderson, of the tobacco substation, "frequently correlate the taste with the appearance of the ash on the cigar. A dark muddy ash in most cases is associated with poor taste and aroma while good cigars produce lighter colored ashes," reports the United Press.

The dark ash was found attributable to excess potash in proportion to other gases, causing incomplete combustion of the carbon. "And the gaseous products thus obtained are not so pleasant to the smoker as those resulting from combustion."

"Good Luck" Bird Mismamed

Bird of good luck to many native tribes, the hammerkop has become an ill omen to people of Johannesburg, South Africa, who have goldfish ponds. Many ponds have been denuded of fish by the feathered fishermen. Haunting small creeks, they feed on frogs. Recently a Johannesburg resident put a frog pond near his pools of goldfish. Both frogs and goldfish began disappearing and soon all were gone. His experience has become the lot of many keepers of goldfish, but now that the hammerkop is fond of fish they do not know whether it will be worth while to restock ponds. The hammerkop builds a nest six feet in diameter with only a small opening for exit and ingress, usually on a hidden rocky ledge.

Lightning Cures Boy It Silenced

While herding pigs Peter Schoti, a farmer's son, took shelter under a tree in Yugoslavia to escape a storm. Lightning struck the tree, according to a report received at Belgrade, and rendered the lad deaf and dumb. Three days later Peter again sought shelter under a tree. Lightning also struck that timber, hurling the boy to the ground. When he recovered he could speak and hear perfectly again.
