both in the United States and possibly abroad, the latter still being under advisement. A similar point for the use of men in the service has also been developed.

Instead of 6,000 signers to nominate state officers by independent parties, it now requires 12,000 signers with at least 50 from each county in the state. Fulton and Hamilton Counties being reckoned as one. Town nominations, instead of being filed twenty days before election as has been the case, must now be filed not earlier than the ninth Tuesday and not later, than six days after the ninth Tuesday. Independent nominations must now be filed not earlier than the ninth Tuesday and not later than two days after the eighth Tuesday preceding general election day.

A Soldier's Strength

Every ounce of it must stand up stronger during his first year's service if he could have the benefits of because it fortifies the lungs and throat, creates strength to avoid grippe and pneumonia and makes rich blood to avert rheumatic tendencies.

Send a bottle of SCOTT'S to a relative or friend in the service.

JUST back of the second line trenches, he has time for thoughts—long, long thoughts.

Thoughts like these:—

"At home they are raising the Third Liberty Loan. It's a lot of money—billions of dollars. Yet somehow dollars don't look as big over here as they used to, back home.

My idea of Big things has changed!

Food and warm clothes, ships, guns, shells, medicine, bandages, ambulances, aeroplanes—Victory—they're the Big Things over here.

For we've got to carry on and end this hell—forever.

And this idea about the Big Things must get across to the folks at home.

They know we're out for Victory—they won't fail us. Of course they'll buy Liberty Bonds!"

A million men, our husbands, our sons, our brothers, are thinking thoughts like these.

We must be worthy of their faith in us.

We must buy Liberty Bonds.

THE PRICE OF COLLARS

Washington, D. C., April 27.—Cluett, Peabody & Company, the great collar manufacturers, have been cited to appear before the Federal Trade Commission, and answer the charge of "stifling and suppressing competition in the manufacture, marketing and sale of its collars." It is charged in the complaint that dealers have been deprived of "their freedom to sell such collars at prices which in their judgment would be warranted by trade conditions." It appears that the manufacturers have maintained a resale price, and the claim is made in the government complaint that dealers who do not charge the new prices for collars are refused new supplies.

It is common knowledge that collars which formerly sold at fifteen cents, or two for a quarter, have been advanced to twenty cents each, or three for fifty cents. The leading manufacturers seem to have reached the conclusion that they should advance prices at almost simultaneous time. Evidently the Federal Trade Commission can see no reason for this extraordinary increase in prices, and the action against Cluett, Peabody & Company may throw a good deal of light on the practices of some manufacturers who first find a way to control the supply of a particular commodity, and then fix prices that yield large profits. The Federal Trade Commission is particularly anxious to know by what right manufacturers refuse to sell retailers who entertain the apparently unpopular notion that a reasonable profit is enough, even tho it may result in cutting the twenty-cent collar scale that has been imposed upon the consumer.

Anything You Want to Know

A half dozen city ticket offices for as many different railroads have been knocked into a cocked hat in Washington, and in their place Mr. McAdoo has opened one central office, where information is kept on on tap, tickets sold, baggage checked, and other comforts for the travelers are supplied.

Another innovation in the Capital is a central bureau of information in the down-town district, where details with regard to the management of all affairs of the government will be made known. In other words, it is expected that the stranger in Washington will be able to learn whom to call upon without chasing all about the city looking for the right division or bureau.

There are many other steps being taken into consideration to co-ordinate and consolidate the different bureaus and agencies of government, and Congress has been dealing with the problem. It is recognized that all such movements are in the interests of efficiency.

American Idealism

President Wilson has swept aside the pleas of misguided gentlemen who have been visiting Washington during the past two or three weeks, asking Congress to permit the court-martial of citizens charged with disloyalty in any form, instead of allowing them to stand for jury trial, as Wisconsin and Minnesota sent "loyalists" here to advocate this idea. President Wilson says that he believes that such legislation would be unconstitutional, and that in character, it would put us nearly on a level of the very people we are fighting and affecting to despise.

As the War progresses, it is seen every day that the Administration is proceeding along lines that adjust themselves to the highest American ideals. Secretary Baker appeared before a great audience in Washington upon his return from Europe. He said, "We are fighting to make force the master of the political philosophy and belief, pure naked force. It is not the destiny upon which a permanent and beautiful civilization can be built," he continued. "But we must accept that challenge as it has been made. There is no answer except cold, relentless, antiquate force." The tremendous crowd roared with approval as the War Secretary reiterated the purpose of America and the Allies. "We are fighting an adversary," "When force is divorced from morality," he went on, "there is something in morality that engenders the force to overcome it." Mr. Baker declared there was no doubt about the outcome of the conflict, and he predicted eventual victory for the Allies.

The Frivolities of Life

There are so many things that one should not do in wartime, that the question as to amusements often comes up for discussion. Herbert Hoover has made a hit with his epigram: "Go back to the Simple life. Be contented with simple food, simple clothes. Work hard, pray hard, play hard. Do it courageously. We have a victory to win! The base ball teams have started off for the season with their old-time attendance, and the spirit of play-time appears to be in fine working order. The President, past sixty, is a fine specimen of physical manhood. With all the heavy responsibilities that rest upon him he finds time for golf, walking and other exercises requiring physical exertion. And three nights a week he is at the theatre. Many prominent public men keep themselves "fit" by their refusal to give up the frivolities of life. On the other side of the ledger comes the many men who take themselves so seriously that their health becomes affected as a result of too close application to their work, and too little exercise. Seven Senators have died within the past year; and when one observes the manner in which most of these statesmen live, the casualty list is not surprising. Leave the house in the morning, and drive in an automobile to the Senate office building; down to work, letters to dictate, preparation for the day in the Senate whisked over to the Capitol building and then hours in the Chamber, with only intermission for lunch in the restaurant on the floor below; back to the office; home again in an automobile; dinner; out again in the evening, traveling by automobile; back home late at night, and off to bed. The next day it all has to be done over again. Is it any wonder so many Senators die? And the reason is usually found in the fact that these men are sacrificing themselves to their duty towards their country. They miss the frivolities of life.

Mr. Taft a War Worker

Former President William Howard Taft is devoting his time to the problems of employers and employees, as affected by the war. Thus, we have an ex-President, who has resigned from the Yale faculty, coming back to the Capital, where he was once quite supreme. He moves about with the crowd, just like ordinary people. The secret service men, who once guarded him, now merely have time to give him a nod of friendly recognition in passing, as they go by with respectful glances that insure the safety of the man who beat Mr. Taft at the polls a few years ago. The ex-President is "doing his bit," and there isn't much applause, resulting from the task.

In another place of life we find the widow of Admiral Dewey working for the Red Cross, and grabbing her lunch at the counter with government clerks. She too, is "doing her bit," and on the streets she attracts no more attention than the thousand dollar stenographer of years ago.

The way the great and the humble rub elbows in Washington these days is a marvelous thing—and it speaks well for democracy in the making.

DON'T SMOKE THEM—EAT THEM! TOASTED CIGARETTES.

"Search the pockets of the civilians, and the trenches of the soldiers will be found being fertilized by American cigarettes in France. Authorities agree that men in the trenches need cigarettes almost as much as food and ammunition.

Doctors, nurses, and commanding officers all join in the demand which has awakened in this country a great movement to keep our boys supplied with smokes.

Millions of the famous LUCKY STRIKE Cigarettes are "going over" all the time. There's something about the idea of the toasted cigarette that appeals to the men who spend their time in mud, wet trenches and billets.

Then, too, the real Kentucky Burley tobacco of the LUCKY STRIKE cigarette gives them the solid satisfaction of a pipe, with a lot less trouble.
