A BARN WITHOUT BOARDS

A carpenter would not think of building a barn without boards—would he? And he doesn't simply order boards and leave it go at that. He selects the kinds of wood he needs, the proper lengths and thicknesses. Yet isn't it a fact that you are attempting to erect the building which is to hold your fortunes without a bank account? You can no more do it than a carpenter can build a barn without boards. And in the selection of a bank that is to be YOUR Bank it is essential to your success that you choose one that will give you personal attention. If such a bank appeals to you, may we have your business?

THE MAGIC SHIP

Andover's Fourth Big Annual Spectacle, Andover Auditorium May 31st and June 1st

The Andover Auditorium is beginning to resemble the New York Hippodrome these days, not especially, of course, but there is one every afternoon and evening, a hundred or more soloists, dancers and chorus lassies are romping across the big dance floor to the crash of the piano and the count of the instructors. They are preparing for the presentation of the big spectacle "The Magic Ship," to be presented under the auspices of the Andover Chamber of Commerce, Friday and Saturday nights of next week, May 31st and June 1st.

The big show is to be given under the direction of the Erie, favorably known not only in this vicinity, but throughout Central New York for their splendid productions. "The Magic Ship" was given recently in Jamestown for seven performances, and previous to that in Pittsburg, Pa., Syracuse, Niagara Falls and Rochester, N. Y. Over one-hundred and twenty-five performers will be used in the Andover presentation and the production will necessitate the use of a carload of gorgeous scenery, dazzling costumes and electrical effects. This is the fourth of Andover's big yearly amusement spectacles, and as this year's production will undoubtedly surpass all previous efforts in its brilliancy and magnitude, usually large crowds are expected to attend from the surrounding towns.

REV. V. L. EGGLESTON GOES OVERSEAS

Accepted as Y. M. C. A. Secretary and Starts June 2nd. Enrolled for 16 Months Service, if War Lasts That Time.

Rev V. L. Eggleston went to New York City last week and enrolled for Y. M. C. A. work overseas. He will start June 2nd.

Mr. Eggleston had previously been accepted for a secretaryship in this country at one of the camps, but there were so many volunteering for the service, and the demand for overseas work was so urgent, and so few who could accept the call, that he was persuaded to go where he was most needed. He will go from New York to Princeton College where he will be given military training for a week, and will sail for London the week of June 10th. From London he will go to Bordeaux and from there to Paris.

Mr. Eggleston will have entire charge as manager of one of the large Y. M. C. A. department stores on the front. He has promised to give News readers an occasional letter telling of his work when he gets to his hedaquarters. As yet he does not know where he will be sent from Paris.

WILLIAM DIFFIN

William Diffin was born in the town of Andover, April 7th, 1852. He was of a family of nine children of which only one brother and two sisters are still living. When a young man, about eighteen years of age, he united with the Baptist Church, and several years ago was elected to the office of Deacon.

On May 2nd, 1896, he married Miss Nettie Baker, and of this union was born to them three children, two of whom survive. He died, after a brief illness, May 16th, 1918.

Such is the brief and simple record of a life just ended, but as one who has known him for nearly the whole of those 66 years I want to add a word of appreciation. Whenever I think of him since he went home the words "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches" have come to my mind. Wherever he is spoken of the testimony is the same. "A man of God has gone home and he will be greatly missed, but the influence of his life will never die." A quiet unassuming man, one almost wonders at the impression which his life has made upon the community, until one remembers that his life was one which allowed his Master's life to shine out thru it. He honored the office of Deacon which he held, and just two weeks before the day of his burial he served at the table of his Lord. In the prayer meeting his words were few but all felt that they were sincere and he went out to live the words which he had spoken. He often requested the singing of a particular hymn, always one which spoke of a deep Christian experience. He has left a heritage to his family more precious than all the wealth of the world, and during all of the years of his life he has been laying up treasures in heaven and has gone to his reward.

A Friend.

This is Red Cross Week

This is Red Cross Week in America. It is the purpose to raise one hundred million dollars that will be required to keep the good work going the coming twelve months, and to meet any extension that may be demanded of it.

More than a million of the men of America have cheerfully offered their lives to their country.

Hundreds of thousands of them are now in uniform, facing the common foe.

They have not counted the cost of their patriotism.

They are ready to make the supreme sacrifice for their country if it shall be so decreed.

Every week their ranks are being augmented. Every week the problem of equipping them for their stern work becomes greater.

The Government is meeting that problem ably and effectively. Steadily it is preparing for the victory that must be won.

The Liberty Bonds you have bought are helping to do that. All around you you see the Titian work of preparation.

From one end of the country to the other you may see in camps and cantonments the new soldiers making ready for their part in the struggle—a struggle for freedom—for liberty against autocracy—for righteousness against unbridled tyranny.

This is a time when the future of the world is at stake.

It is a time when the people of the United States must play a great and important part in freeing the world from the Prussian menace.

It is a time when there must be no counting of expense, no thought in any American mind save the thought of victory.

In winning that victory the men in khaki who so freely responded to their country's call must do the hard, bitter work.

In the difficult days that are before them the hearts of their fellow countrymen go out to them.

But thousands of miles stretch between their countrymen and their battlefield.

They must meet the enemy on the soil of France and Flanders. They must drive him back to the soil of Germany.

And in that great battle every American at home must stand behind them, supplying them not only with every needful weapon of war, but surrounding them with all the care and comforts that a mother would give her son.

It is not possible for Americans individually to administer to the men who have followed the flag across the seas.

It is possible, however, for them to give to their brothers and their sons and to all who are in the fight the wonderful care and tenderness that are bestowed by the greatest voluntary institution in the world—the American Red Cross.

Always a marvellous organization, this institution has, within the past year, been made so effective that it is able to perform miracles.

The ablest business men of America are its head, giving their services freely to the comfort of the soldiers.

To-day they ask for help—for the spontaneous help of all their countrymen. And the appeal is one that no American should refuse.

Working for the Red Cross in Europe there are now more than three thousand devoted and courageous men and women, recking nothing of their own comfort or safety in their zeal to serve the soldiers of their country.

These men and women are to the American in khaki a practical illustration of the love and gratitude of the people at home. Everything that is done to cheer and inspire the men, to care for them in illness, to bring them back to strength after battle wounds, is done in the name of the American people.

Here at home is the desire to help. The Red Cross makes that desire practical—puts into execution the will to help that is in every American breast.

With every new army that is sent across the water the work of the Red Cross becomes greater.

But it is so organized as to meet any extension that may be demanded of it.

What it needs is money—"Money"—MONEY.

What it needs IMMEDIATELY is the one hundred million dollars that is asked for now, and for which a drive will be made this week.

That sum of money should be contributed willingly, cheerfully AT ONCE.

It is not a question of what we can afford.

We can afford to do nothing else.

Every American institution, every American security, every American dollar will become valueless without victory.

And in the winning of victory the Red Cross fights and works with the army, and enables the army to triumph.

No corporation can afford NOT to contribute, for, as Judge Morgan J. O'Brien points out, a corporation board of directors would be recreant to its duty to the shareholders if it did not thus help to defend their interests from the enemy.

No individual can afford not to contribute, for the men on the firing line are fighting for the safety of every American home.

The Red Cross is indeed the greatest mother in the world.

With all the love and tenderness that it is possible to bestow it cares for the fighting man—keeps him in spirit before the battle, and, in the event of a wound, swiftly brings him back to health and strength.

Above all, it is an ever present living example of the faith and trust and gratitude of the people in the distant Motherland across the sea.

American people, this is a marvelous opportunity to do for your soldiers, however distant they may be, what you would do for them could you stand behind the trenches.

Transmute your dollars into love and tenderness.

Make the man who are fighting for you understand that wherever the Stars and Stripes go, there also the flag of the Red Cross, a symbol of the love and faith and gratitude of the great American Nation.

RED CROSS BENEFIT BALL GAME

There will be a red hot base ball game between the Cutlery Plant and Silk Mill on the Silk Mill grounds, Saturday afternoon. The proceeds will all be given to the Red Cross.

There has been much rivalry between the two teams and the game Saturday afternoon will be fought to a finish.

Come see the game and help the Red Cross.
