Care, Courtesy and Common Sense

A total of 91,000 Americans were killed in accidents in 1949. Of that total, more than one-third, or 31,500 people, died as the result of motor accidents, making motor vehicles the country's leading accident-killer.

These warning figures have extra meaning for us now that the warm spring days are here and vacation time is approaching. The use of automobiles is not confined to any one season, but there will be more of us on the road in cars from now until fall.

There is obviously no definite set of rules that will keep us safe from motor fatalities. But there are three rules, familiar to all of us, which, if followed, can cut down the possibility of automobile accidents and deaths. These are care, courtesy, and common sense.

Careful driving means care of your own life and the lives of people riding with you, other motorists on the road, and of pedestrians. But it's difficult to drive carefully in a car in poor condition.

A periodic check on brakes and tires can check accidents and the motor must be kept in perfect condition if a motorist wants to keep in control of his car. It's a good idea, too, to make certain that the windshield wiper is in good working condition, since many motor accidents happen in the rain and fog.

Courtesy on the road actually embraces unwritten laws of self-preservation. Numerous accidents and fatalities have occurred through discourteous practices like "hogging the road," insisting on the right of way, and trying to beat the traffic light. No motorist can rely on "the other guy" to stop or to go to great lengths to avoid a collision.

It's only common sense to obey road signs advising motorists to "Stop," or "Drive Slowly," or "Beware Railroad Crossing". They were put there for a purpose—to save your life and the lives of others. Three out of five motor accidents occur at night, and it's sensible as well as courteous to stay on your own side of the road, especially during twilight and dark, and to dim your lights when cars approach in the opposite direction.

Finally, it's still true that "liquor and gasoline don't mix." The man who has been drinking and gets behind the wheel of a car is courting trouble. Drunken driving has been responsible for numerous deaths and permanent injuries.

Care, courtesy, and common sense won't put a damper on anyone's motor trip. But a little attention to this simple formula will, directly or indirectly, help avoid tragedy and even fatality.

Bob: "Jones tried to beat a train to the crossing."

Gob: "Did he get across?"

Bob: "No, but they're making one for him."

The next meeting will be a picnic which will be held at Cuba Lake.

The club is going to have a food booth at the Hay Day to be held at the Seaberry farm.

Refreshments were served and a good time reported.

A Plea For Surveyors

Albany, June 12.—Surveyors, the transit-squinters and tape toters, are loose again on the 14,321 miles of New York State highways.

Guileless and trusting in their pursuit of a painstaking job, these highway builders daily put their lives in the hands of motorists. Often seen in the middle of the road, they are an easy target for careless drivers.

The State Department of Public Works, therefore, reminds motorists that "there's no open season on surveyors."

Being scarce—there are less than 2,000 with the department, these birds are at a premium. Not only does it take about $5,000 to educate one, but many have acquired years of experience which is worth a great deal more.

The State Department of Public Works repeats its plea that drivers save surveyors in the interest of better roads.
