CHRISTMAS

THEY say 'tis night on Christmas Eve, and high as I could reach, I've hung my stockings on the wall, and left a hole on each.

And to-morrow 'll be the day our blessed Christ was born. Why grieve on earth to pity me, whom many shun as scorn.

MOTHER, is it the morning yet? I dreamed that it was here; I thought the sun shone through the pane, no shade and no clear.

CHRISTMAS MORNING. All night long I waked with weeping till the bolts are ringing wild. All night long I waked with my sorrow, and pain in my face, like a child.

THE MOTHER. All night long I waked with weeping till the bolts are ringing wild. All night long I waked with my sorrow, and pain in my face, like a child.

THE HOME OF LUTHER AND MELANCHTHON

Some time before you reach Wittenberg, you see its extensive grass-covered fortifications, which age still keep in excellent condition.

The house in which Luther lived is soon reached, at your left, and is part of the old building connected with the university.

Only by accident is the work of genius immediately popular, in the sense of being widely sought.

Not far from here, and also to the left, is Melanchthon's house. A teacher lives in it now, but as he was not in, his servant showed us the premises.

The Castle church, where Luther nailed the ninety-five theses to the door, is at the further end of the town.

War on the living, not on the dead!

War on the living, not on the dead!

The same office, the same Frederic the Wise and John Stief, electors of Saxony and other staunch friends.

MAN AND WOMAN

From my experience of a woman's nature is not as I have supposed, though her knowledge may be far beyond that of the man.
