HEALTH FOR ALL

This column is sponsored, in the interest of better health, by the Allegany Health & Tuberculosis Association, 44 Schuyler St., Belmont, N. Y.

A diagnosis of heart trouble is frequently associated in peoples' minds with sudden death. Heart disease, however, does not necessarily mean "death overnight." Thousands of people with damaged hearts are, with the guidance of their physicians, leading normal useful lives.

There are two main reasons why heart disease seems to be on the increase. First, improved diagnostic techniques are helping doctors detect heart ailments which in many cases would have gone unnoticed years ago. Besides, heart trouble is more likely to develop in later years and, because of increased control over infectious diseases of childhood and youth, people are enjoying longer lives these days.

There are many kinds of heart ailments, affecting infants and young people as well as older people. A few infants are born with congenital heart defects, but modern surgical methods are now able to correct many of these conditions.

Rheumatic fever, mainly a disease of childhood youth, leads the list of infections which frequenty damage the heart. Other diseases which can injure young hearts are diphtheria, pneumonia, scarlet fever, and influenza. The child who gets any of these diseases needs prompt medical care during the acute stage, medical supervision during recuperation and periodic checkups afterwards — to give him his best chance of warding off permanent heart ills.

The two most common forms of heart ailment during middle and old age are hypertensive heart disease and coronary heart disease. The hypertensive form, usually showing up in the early forties, is heart strain brought on by high blood pressure, While hypertension, or high blood pressure, may exist without causing heart disease, prompt medical care is necessary to help bring the blood pressure back to normal range and thus decrease the possibility of hypertensive heart disease.

Although it may occur earlier, coronary heart disease, a disease of the arteries which carry the blood to the heart muscle, is most common after 50. Most people who suffer from coronary heart disease can live long, useful lives if they carefully follow the doctor's directions.

Heart attacks rarely snuff out a person's life without warning. Among warnings which may mean heart trouble are shortness of breath, palpitations or irregular heart beats, swelling of feet and ankles, and chronic fatigue. The person who suspects he has heart disease should see his doctor without delay. If the heart is sound, the doctor can reassure the patient. But if there is something wrong, it is best to have it discovered as soon as possible. For then a person is in the position to learn how to "live with" his injured heart and perhaps ward off sudden or untimely death.

RURAL TEENAGERS from Denmark, Austria and Germany arrived in this country this week for a year's stay on farms and in rural homes of Grange members. New York State, keenly conscious of the fine international relations that this program accomplishes, has a large group of the more than one hundred boys and girls who are looking forward eagerly to living, working and playing in our democratic atmosphere. Several of them, after a day in New York and Washington, came directly to the State Grange Youth Training School at Cobleskill, and were quickly made to feel at home with folks of their age from all over the state. Most of them possessed an English vocabulary that enabled them to get along and be understood. Some were in the colorful Bavarian costume, which they shed for the more comfortable T-shirt and jeans of our young folks.

Wib Justi, National Grange Youth Director, spoke at the school and introduced several of the European boys and girls, and assured everyone that the "value of entertaining one of these young people in our farm homes was immeasurable."

YOUTH Committee named at our State Grange Youth School in Cobleskill this past week includes Bert Morse, from Cortland county; Kenneth Sutton, Jefferson; Richard Elwood, Schenectady; and Kenneth Beightol, Chautauqua; and Clyde Locke, Niagara; as alternates. These will serve in an advisory capacity to our State Grange Youth committee to plan and determine policy for next year's school.

More than a hundred young folks spent a profitable and pleasant week at Cobleskill, and will bring to their county Granges valuable training in leadership and Grange affairs. There were two representatives from almost every upstate county.

SPECIAL SESSIONS for conferring the Sixth Degree have been planned, according to State Master Henry D. Sherwood, in anticipation of the National Grange Sessions at Atlantic City in November. Many counties are planning to run special buses to these, and it is not too late to be making plans. The schedule includes: South Kortringht (Delaware) Oct. 15; Liberty (Sullivan) Oct. 16; Kingston (Ulster) Oct. 17; Mahopac (Putnam) Oct. 18; and Farmingdale (Long Island) Oct. 19.

Better Health For Children

A Community Service Issued by Children's Hospital of Buffalo, N. Y.

One of the most difficult parts of growing-up is learning to live fully and constructively with one's emotions or feelings. It is in this area that parents also find it difficult to know how to help most effectively. The children's Hospital of Buffalo has two clinics which are set up to help children and their parents with such problems.

The Child Guidance clinic is set up to help with the emotional or behavior problems which arise with greater or lesser intensity in all families. The other is a special clinic to help deal with the emotional turmoil which is so frequently stirred up in both parents and child where the child has some chronic illness or physically handicapping condition. This is the Psychosomatic clinic.

There's an old saying that no child is born bad. When children lie, steal, defy authority or indulge in solitary day dreaming, there's a reason. Often the cause of such behavior problems is not recognized by parents because they are too close to the problem or because, subconsciously, they feel responsible for the situation.

Dr. Sherman Little, Director of these two clinics at Children's Hospital, points out that all children present behavior problems during the process of growing up. "They are children's basically healthy attempts to solve a situation which they find difficult or painful. The fact that the child's method of solution may be unsuccessful or disturbing to his parents and associates is not the child's fault. Every so often the child becomes 'stuck' in his unsatisfactory way of behaving and his parents become equally 'stuck' in attempting to help him. At such times a Child Guidance clinic can be helpful in avoiding serious health and social problems which may result if parents fail to get professional assistance. The chance of severe trouble is greatly reduced when there is a healthy, happy relationship between parents and children."

Child Guidance clinics today are considered of such importance in the treatment of the child as a whole — mentally, emotionally and phsically—that most children's hospitals have either already established such a department or are planning to do so.
