The dove of peace appears to be again circuling about our heads.

* * *

One fears the Greeks when they bring gifts and the Germans when they offer peace.

* * *

Get all the Liberty Bonds you can. When the interest falls due you can use it to buy sugar.

* * *

Mr. Robin has carried his cheerful red waistcoat and pretty brown coat south for the winter.

* * *

If you have a chill and your nose turns blue.
Go home and take quinine for the Flu!

* * *

New York sets the pace for the whole country. But we trust we shall not all have to rock with explosions.

* * *

Darning needles are now out of the market, and the club women who do not like to mend stockings will be pleased.

* * *

Judging by published extracts from Boche newspapers the motto of the German press might well be "Hope for the hopeless."

* * *

Our ideas of woman as exclusively a sewing and dishwashing being fade away when we see her as a farmer and as an auto mechanic.

* * *

You will inevitably regret many of your actions in this life, but you will never regret subscribing to your limit for the Fourth Liberty Loan.

* * *

The people in France just now are not only diivded into Allies and Germans, but into optimists and pessimists. Which is which? One guess.

* * *

And the Senate has turned Lovely Woman down. Let it beware! It is quite on the cards that Lovely Woman may turn the Senate down hard some day.

* * *

Ordinary needles also are scarce and growing scarcer. High school girls (who are all past mistresses in the art of pinning up rents) will find themselves welcomed in the family circle.

* * *

One of the present important questions: On the return of peace shall we be reconstructed by a committee appointed by Congress or a commission appointed by the President? There seems to be no doubt in the general mind that we must all be reconstructed by some agency.

* * *

By the way, when the Chicago Board of Trade was in session the other day a dove flew in thru the window and lighted upon a desk. Board of Trade men are great believers in signs and omens and many of them immediately based their operations for the day upon the expectation of a falling market. When they gravely looked at their bank balances later they decided that the omen of the dove was simply that their money would take wings.

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES

The subject of female suffrage seems to be an apple of discord to both House and Senate, but at all events it is now considered worthy of attentive contemplation in both places. The evolution of their attitude toward it has been gradual but steady. The same may be said of the whole country, tho in certain districts the movement has been less legargic.

Perhaps it would be easier to approach vexed questions if legislators had the courage to say what they think, or to say it oftener.

Thousands of women have studied political economy, tariffs, the theories of government, geology, international law, and other subjects concerning which the average congressman is deplorably ill-informed. And many an illiterate hoodlum votes at elections where women of the above type are barred. Can you visualize Mary Roberts Rhinehart excluded from a polling booth, and a bunch of bar-room derelicts admitted — the prerogative being conferred on the basis of general intelligence, which seems the most rational basis on which to determine qualification?

The question is not merely whether the suffrage should be extended, but whether it should not in certain cases be restricted. The intrinsic value of the average woman's opinion on public questions we are too discreet—or too timid—to discuss here. We are not at present looking for a permanent lodging in the cemetery. But what about the opinion of the average man? Male voters are not all barroom derelicts—but still less are they all authorities on the philosophy of government.

Examination tests, applied to males and females alike, have often been suggested, but always, with caution. Not many candidates for office have the nerve to tell a mass meeting of male voters that he favors the exclusion of some of them from the ballot.

AN INVENTORY

Draft classification is not the only kind of classification made necessary by the war. An entire readjustment of human values has taken place.

An American lieutenant in the aero corps has lately defeated fifteen antagonists in one battle. The story of it reads like one gigantic lie; yet it has been proven in detail—without invoking the evidence of the lieutenant himself.

A movie hero in a western thriller vanquishes a gang of bold, bad bandits—and we don't know whether to laugh or swear at the extravagant incongruities of the scenario. So we go to sleep. If the lieutenant's exploit was not a fact its sheer improbability would make it dull reading.

And it sets us wondering what use could have been made of the courage of all these aviators if the war had not taken place. They would probably have gone to and from a city office or store in derbies and sack suits, with umbrellas and rubbers on wet days, and so traveled into obscure middle age, and on to senility. And most of them will very likely do so when the war is over, if they survive it.

With our baseball heroes it is otherwise. Many of them are pretending to be ship-painters for fear of being drafted, and records of the terrible air-battles that color the war news rarely contain the names of idols whom the sporting pages have taught us to revere. The fair name of professional baseball is not retrieved by a few honorable exceptions among the rank of diamond stars; they are not numerous enough.

And it is not only in the world of baseball that human values must be graded anew.

"He who fights and runs away
May live to fight another day."

German militarism is now "fighting and running away," and in any peace settlement we must be careful that it is deprived of all power to "fight another day."

* * *

We can't successfully fight a war by fault finding and pulling the government to pieces. Get behind and push. It needs you.

HOMESEEKERS

We have heard much about the proposed reclamation of territorial tracts to provide homesteads for returning soldiers. The voice of approval is laudest, but here and there sounds a note of criticism.

It is not natural that those who have never felt the lure of the farm—much less that of the wilderness — should show more than a lukewarm enthusiasm about the scheme. Agriculture calls for a special combination of qualities, and colonization even more so. A farmer is as much a specialist these days as a laryngologist, and needs ten times as much versatility. This portentous truth is better appreciated in Andover than in the large cities, but it is no longer a secret even there; and many populous centers have contributed quotas of soldiers who will show only a qualified rapture at the prospect of subjugating nature after completing the subjugation of the Hohenzollerns.

But the scheme is just. The draft takes an enormous toll among the farmer boys. Physical strength is the first requirement, and where is it found so uniformly as among farmers? No human material is so easily adapted to the exactions of army life as the kind that is found on the farm. This is a war of machinery, and the cities contain many kinds of machine-hands but the experience of most of them is of the narrower kind, whereas the farmer has to be ready for any sort of emergency—from repairing his electric light plant to tinkering his tractor. And when a horse or mule needs doctoring he has the machine-hand tied to a tree.

The robust body and the dexterious hand—these are the merchandise that Uncle Sam is hunting, and where does he find it in such abundance as on the farm?

Since then so heavy a drain is likely to be made upon one class of population, it is only fair that that class should be especially considered in plans of replenishment and readjustment. The program should be so framed as to meet the needs of the largest number of candidates making claims upon it, and those who by the circumstances of their upbringing are not fitted for a scheme of colonization will be given every chance of adapting themselves to its demands. They will not have very much to learn after their life in camp.

Many thousands will not need to avail themselves at all of its advantages, and the hardy pioneers who do will arrive none too soon to stem the tide of city-ward migration which has contributed so much to unwholesome congestion in recent years.

WHEN PREACHERS CUSS

Son time ago at Sandusky two hundred preachers attended the synod of the Reformed Church of America. The usual exercises formed part of the proceedings, which also included prayers for the success of the allied armies and for the overwhelming defeat of Germany.

The prayers were in German.

Several arguments may be urged to show that English would have been more appropriate, or French—or even Japanese. But the arguments may be saved; many of the aged ministers could understand no language but their native German.

When venerable preachers feel that they will be trifling with the Almighty if they cuss the kaiser in a tongue that they can't understand we need entertain no doubt as to their loyalty. Thank Heaven, we have many citizens of German blood, churchmen and laymen both, whose fidelity to the land of their adoption stands the acid test, and stands it daily.

The prayer-leader could easily have used English, and those who didn't understand could have signified concurrence by preserving that inert condition of torpid unconsciousness which so often characterizes a prayer-meeting. But they wanted to participate more intimately in the festival of malediction against Prussian tyranny. And it is no light matter to repudiate national traditions that have had less than a generation in which to become extinct.

REPUBLICAN TRICKERY AND SUFFRAGE

The haste with which Republican leaders are seeking to throw the blame for the recent defeat of the woman suffrage resolution upon the Democrats, suggests that Senator Pittman was well within the facts when he charged the minority with bad faith. The Republican caucus agreed to vote for the resolution at any time, and told the Democrats favoring the measure that they would give them 33 votes for it. Believing this to be the case the Democrats made strenuous efforts to secure, and believed they had secured 31 votes. This was the situation when the measure was brought up for action. The Republican leaders refused to give their poll, but said: "Leave that to us and we will deliver 33 votes."

"That is the way we left it," Senator Pittman said on the floor of the Senate "and under that assurance we brought this amendment before this body. Then after we had been deceived into bringing it befor this body, after we had been led into the trap, the distinguished senator from Utah goes to the same people whom he had promised 33 votes and says: 'We can only get 32.'" Why did he promise 33? Because the 32 votes with the votes that the Democrats then had, would still defeat the amendment. Why did he come down to 32 votes? Because we gained enough with the 33 to pass the amendment. I believe that when the country know that this is politics, pure, cold-blooded politics, they will understand that their views on suffrage are insignificant in comparison to the importance of meeting such a subterfuge by a United Democratic party."

Earlier in this speech Sen. Pittman pointed out that "the members on the Republican side have not the sentimntal nor the social conditions meeting them in their states that are meeting some of our members on our side. There never was a time when the leaders of that party, if they wanted to pass the joint resolution, could not have given 35 or 40 votes for it."

So far as the Republican party is concerned extending the colored vote is an advantage, and few Americans who have not lived in the South realize the conditions there. We are full of pity for Poland, because hun depredations have reduced the value of her proprty one-third in four years, Negro domination in South Carolina reduced the value of its property two-thirds in the same length of time. The South has not forgotten, and while her sufferings during the reconstruction period do not justify, they go far toward explaining southern opposition to extending the franchise.

Having refused the women suffrage for half a century the Republican party has again tricked them to gain a political advantage and with victory of sight expects to claim full credit for the passage of the resolution later on.

However, the President's appeal to the Senate makes him easily the leader of the suffrage forces in this country, and they have already gladly hailed him as their chief.

TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION —?

In the middle of the suffrage debate Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania, took occasion to make a long, careful and extremely enlightening argument on the taxing powers of the Government. It was listened to with marked attention by all the lawyers, and by the suffragists in the crowded galleries. But he didn't once seem to remember the part that taxation playd in the fundation of this Government, nor did he mention the fundamental principle that taxation without representation is tyranny. When the vote was taken he voted to deny women a voice in the choosing of their representatives, altho Pennsylvania, outside of Philadelphia, voted for the enfranchisement of women. Query, whom does he represent?

The secret of military success appears to be simple enough. All that is necessary is to get the other fellow running and to keep him so.

THE PRESIDENT AND SUFFRAGE

The suffragists have lost another battle in the war that has now been going on for over seventy years, but they have won over their avowed leader and spokesman in the foremost advocate in the world, President Wilson. The suffrage amendment is passed, and it is confidently believed that it will be passed before the pressent Congress expires next March, the frowning bastions of three fourths of the state legislatures are still to be won.

When the suffragists transfer their activities from the national to the state legislative bodies the President's speech in their behalf will prove their most effective argument. Even the President and the suffragists seemed to lose in the Senate on October first the loss is more apparent than real for this was made the occasion for reading their emancipation proclamation in terms that spell victory, and the Naiton's Leader has laid their case before a tribunal of the American people. He has made their appeal in words that ring like the echo of the Declaration of Independence, and will find a response in every section of this country. A battle has been lost, but the cause is won.

And now they tell us that Spanish influenza, despite its name, comes straight from the Orient. A name has not much significance. For instance, we have always known that German Kultur, despite its name, came direct from the devil.

Ice Boxes on Wheels

Refrigerator cars for carrying meat are ice boxes traveling on wheels.

Most people in America would have to go without fresh meat, or would have to pay more for what they could get, if it were not for these traveling ice boxes.

Gustavus F. Swift, the first Swift in the packing industry, saw the need of these traveling ice boxes before others.

He asked the railroads to build them. The railroads refused. They were equipped, and preferred to haul cattle rather than dressed beef.

So Gustavus F. Swift had to make the cars himself. The first one was a box car rigged up to hold ice. Now there are 7,000 Swift refrigerator cars. Each one is as fine an ice box as you have in your home.

Day and night, fair weather and foul, through heat and cold, these 7,000 cars go rolling up and down the country, keeping meat just right, on its way to you.

Thus another phase of Swift & Company's activities has grown to meet a need no one else could or would supply, in way that matched Swift & Company ideas of being useful.

When you see one of these Swift & Company cars in a train, or on a siding, you will be reminded of what is being done for you as the fruit of experience and a desire to serve.

AND BRAWN

In the month of June, 1918, exported to France, Great Britain, Italy and Belgium nine times as much beef as we took from in any month during the three years preceding the war. Operations near Metz and elsewhere have given all nations a salutary proof of the weight of Uncle Sam's fist. So he now sees no danger by giving the world thru the above statistics, an impression of the capacity of his larder.

Will you share some of the store's usual profits on things you buy shopping to-day? The store will tell you how and where.

—Physicians in charge of the Government ship yards give out the following formula as a preventative measure against influenza. Half a teaspoonful of table salt, the same amount of baking soda and six ounces of water. Use as a gargle. The remedy is so simple that any one can make use of it.

—Federal authorities are hunting down fake agents who are collecting money in one of the most contemptable ways. Guided by the gold stars on service flags they have been calling at the homes representing themselves as agents of the Government which they claim wishes the portrait of the dead soldiers "to be placed in an album of dead heroes," a copy of which will be sent to the family. They then spring a nominal charge for the labor and material used by the Government. Hundreds of dollars have been swindled from families by this method. The Government proposes to punish the parties to the limit.

250,000 SIGN BOYCOTT PLEDGE ON FOE GOODS

More than a quarter of a million signatures have been obtained to the pledge against the purchase of German goods, according to Richard M. Hurd, chairman of the Boycott Committee of the American Defense Society. Mr. Hurd said yesterday:

"As a matter of justice to the allied nations whose territory has been ravaged, and whose prosperities have been looted to the extent of perhaps $30,000,000,000, one of the inescapable terms of settlement is that Germany must make reparation, restitution, and pay the total allied costs of the war. Germany must not gain control of the key at pivotal industries or stifle competition in any important industry in the allied countries by subsidizing export dumping."

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS FOR THE BOYS OVER THERE

Only one package can be sent to one soldier. Coupons have been sent to each one abroad to be mailed to his next of kin at home and this label must be presented to obtain the special carten, nine by four by three inches, sent out by the Red Cross. THE KAISER'S 23RD PSALM

How the kaiser Reads the "Twenty-third Psalm," by Kenneth L. Roberts, has been printed in "The Fly," a paper issued weekly by the soldiers in the air service of the A. E. F.

1. The Lord is my particular German shepard, shall not want, tho a few of my subjects may suffer temporary inconvenience.

2. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, formerly the property of Belgium, France, Roumania, Russia and Serbia, but now my own, because I have been allowed to lie on them. He leadeth me beside the still waters of the Dardanelles, which I will keep forever afterward.

3. He restoreth my soul, but says nothing about restoring the devastated portions of France, Belgium and Serbia, so I can't expect to do it. He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake, thus showing that those who consider my glorious deeds to be wrong are hopeless idiots. If he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness, there can be nothing wrong in killing women and children and encouraging my brave troops to acts of frightfulness in order to make my enemies respect me.

4. Yea, tho I walk thru the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me, and my mailed fist and my shining sword do the rest.

5. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies by giving me the Russian wheat fields thru the folly of the Bolsheviki; thou anointest my head with oil by giving me the Roumanian oil wells; my cup runneth over, tho not so much as it will when I have imposed my will on the foul and traitorous Americans.

6. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever. If I find anyone else trying to crowd in with me, I'll use any influence to have him sunk without trace.
