In his address on the league Senator Knox has pity for Germany only among the war sufferers.

He claims we are cruel towards them and that they should not be required to pay for or return the property they stole or wantonly destroyed for war purposes, but to impoverish Belgium and France and impoverish those countries that they would be crippled for generations while their own lands were left unscarred. Such a speech made by a United States Senator, while we are still technically at war with Germany, is to be regretted. His speech will be warmly indorsed in Germany and will have a tendency to encourage the Germans to stand out for better terms in future negotiations. The Senator has no good words to say for our soldiers who gave their lives to the cause of freedom. Not a word for our brave Allies who stood by their side staying the advance of the foe for mankind, but all pity for the enemy at home and German-Americans here. It looks as tho the Senator was bidding for votes among those who were none too loyal during the active hostilities of the war.

With the striking unions, the high cost of living means the cost of food only, and the efforts to reduce the high costs are directed against the products of the farm.

The high cost of living includes the cost of everything we buy—hardware, medicines, machinery, automobiles and everything produced by labor and one of the most important items of cost which boosts the cost of everything else is the advance in freight rates caused by striking railroad organizations. The strikers then have advanced the cost of everything to the high cost of living. High wages and short working days do not tend to reduce living costs.

If the number of hours constituting a working day were cut in two say from 8 to 4 hours, it would take two days work to produce the same article that is now produced in one day, and at the same daily wage it would cost twice as much, thereby doubling the cost of living so far as that article is used or consumed, and unless the daily wage is advanced in proportion it would make the article cost four times as much as before. If unions would stop and consider they would realize that shortening production at a higher cost increases the costs of living in everything. The remedy is not in striking and stopping the wheels of industry and preventing non-unionists from working in their vacated places, but in protecting those who are needing labor and willing to work in the places made vacant by those who threw up the job. The interests of the union is in following the advise of Mr. Gompers as last uttered by him in this matter.

MYSTERIOUS MASTER CRIMINAL

Who Gets Seven Cents of Every Dollar Women Spend for Hats And Gowns.

Moriarty, Arsene Lupin, Fu Manchu and all other famous super-criminals of detective fiction are outdone in real life by the mysterious master criminal for whom a nation-wide search is now being made.

This criminal genius whose identity is not yet even guessed at, is the active head of an organization of expert thieves and swindlers which must number hundred of men, women and children.

The department stores, the most exclusive fur and jewelry shops of the great cities are favorite prey of this amazing criminal band. From them they steal each week costly furs, rich gowns, precious stones, valuable laces and other goods valued at thousands of dollars. And the thefts are accomplished by methods that thus far have baffled the most skilful detectives.

So extensive have the depredations of this band become under ter criminal that every time a woman buys a hat, or a dress, or a coat she pays at least seven per rogue did not exist.

You'll be fascinated by the story of these daring criminal exploits and of the efforts being made to protect the merchants and the public against them. It's all being told for the first time with a wealth of surprising detail in the New York Sunday American.

"KEEP HIM HUMBLE WILL KEEP HIM POOR"

"Two gravestones, two ghosts and a man sick in bed." That is the way an observer of the religious situation in a country hamlet with five farms all about pictured the five churches of the community. Two of them have died a lingering death. They are symbolized by the gravestones. One has an annual service to retain its legal rights to the church property and one, which has an organization but no church building, holds a poorly attended monthly service in a hall. These are the two ghosts. The fifth church represented by the man sick in bed struggles along with a handful of members and a slim attendance paying the preacher when one can be found, on the principle "Lord keep him humble and we'll keep him poor."
