A Rightful Accident.
Our readers are already familiar with the sad affair which took place on the 11th inst. at the depot of Tom's River, New Jersey. A reporter says: The Sunday School connected with the M. E. Church of Long Branch left there in a special train of ten cars on an excursion. A happy merrier gathering, without on a day's recreation, it would have been difficult to find. They had music and banners and a band of ten.

Dutch Dairies.
The farmers' boys and girls of America, I am confident, would like to go with me into a Dutch farmhouse. The house which we visit stands on the bank of the canal, and the water in the canal almost on a level with the ridge pole. One of the dairy maids has been out to the canal to wash her pans and dishes, and now she is taking them back to the house, drawing them in a little cart. Look at the way she goes, she steps, she carries them outside the door, and puts on a pair of slippers as she enters. She has a bonnet so curious that I shall not attempt to describe it, but of just such a pattern as was worn by her grandmother. Some of the cattle are in the fields, guarded by a dog and a cat. A girl with red cheeks and bright eyes opens the door of the stable, and takes us along the stairs to see the cows—twenty-six, cows standing by their tails, or lying down chewing their cud, fastened by rope halter and furnished of all sorts, each cow has her own name written on the side of her head, so that in time their milk will be sold for a good price. There are great tubs filled with milk, and curds and whey, there is a brood place in the stable, where they feed the milk, and the cheese press. We enter a little room and see the pots of butter and the rest of the dairy. A girl comes out with a bucket of milk, and shows us all the apparatus of a dairy. A sixty-four pounder can, but not quite round, but like the can, has a handle on the top. If you were to go with me into some of the warehouses of Amsterdam, you would see cut barrels of the cheese—enough to freight scores of ships. They are kept for months, and years, and never lose their goodness. It is said that you have had a Dutch girl, in a sea fight, after having fired away all of her cannon ball, kept the batteries with cheese—just such cheeses as these which the bright eyes of the girl had just shown us. We go from the stable up to the short flight of stairs into the kitchen and see "Good morning" to the farmer's wife, who has a cat's face like a little child. She shows us over the house, shows us a custom and shows us the best in the kitchen along the wall, like a berth in a ship. An old clock, like a horse weight and pendulum are hung in one corner. She takes great pleasure in showing us her treasures, in the "Good morning" a bureau of the richest mahogany, set off with head and drawers, with carved feet like lion's claws; with four gilt china dishes around the room just under the ceiling—old ware, cups and saucers, which her great grandmother used, which she will hand down to her daughters, and they to their children. There are old pictures on the wall—fine regiments; more china on the tables and stands. Everything is so clean and nice that you are almost afraid to be in the room.—Carlton, in Dublin Journal.

Working Habits.
It takes twenty-four hours to get the steam engine of a paper mill near us up to the working point, but then it goes on as long as you please. So in the glass factories which I used to visit the first in the cold furnace and bring them up to the requisite heat to make glass. The glass heated, they would go right on until the pots which hold the melted glass were burned out. I remember well the effect of working to start here people into action. One day the habit of working steadily and faithfully for hour after hour, and it takes no great effort for a man to do a heavy piece of extra work. But the other would break down under the load.

Miscellaneous.
There is one thing which can always be found, and that is fault.
Louisville has a gambler who owns a controlling interest in a wholesale store.
A Newark boy, whose husband had deserted her, saved $100 by sewing, and was in a terrible quandary as to whether to buy a divorce or a sewing machine. She has decided with the assistance of an old hatter to buy a $10 divorce and a $30 machine.
A Boston teacher was standing hand in hand with her lover, with eyes and mouth agape, watching the incoming of the first train on a new railroad. The locomotive was quiet until it came into the depot, when it whistled, and as the train was stopping, the girl burst out with the exclamation, "Why! but she can't stop here before she's killed!"
