

Chopsticks.
I wonder how the young folks of the United States would get on at dinner if they were to try to eat boiled rice with chopsticks instead of a spoon, or a knife and fork? I should like to see you attempt it, my young friends. But in imagination I hear you all asking this question, "What are chopsticks?" Well, they are small sticks little longer than a pen-holder and about as large. They are made of bamboo, while the weakly people use those manufactured from ebony or ivory, or of silver and gold. They hold them very adroitly between the first and third fingers of the right hand, separated by the thumb. If you wish to gratify your curiosity in the manner, just whistle out two sticks, ten inches long and as large as a pen-holder, and the next time you have boiled rice for dinner see how you will get on; or you may pick up kernels of wheat for practice.

The Chinese handle them just as easily as we our knives and forks. They would laugh to see our man-aging with the sticks, but we should have the fun on our side if they were to sit down to our dinner table; they would make awkward work of it. "Don't you see knives?" Not to eat with! In preparing their food they whip a knife from their pocket and use it for cutting up a chicken or pop-ey. "A poppy!" I don't wonder you stare to hear it. It is well for your pet, who looks up into your face, like your hand and wags his tail when you speak to him, that his master lives on this side of the globe, instead of on the other side, for he would not be permitted to enjoy long life in looking at the legs, or in blowing his teeth and putting on a red hat, or in coming to an ignorant end in the world. A Chinaman, though, might think it glorious. You would see some strange things were you to visit the land beneath your feet, especially in the eating line. Eating houses and hotels in great cities are more numerous than they are in New York or Philadelphia. They have traveling establishments. The peddler of puppy-stew walks through the streets with a broad, shallow basin filled with the food already cooked on the top of his head. He carries a small tin of turpentine on his back, and his big braids on his shoulders. He finds a place to suit him where customers are plenty, sets up his umbrella, lights a charcoal fire in his furnace, and in a few minutes the piece of fish, chicken or dog, mixed with rice, is warming and steaming in the pan. He takes his bowl and chopsticks from a basket, and in a few minutes is ready to serve the hungry crowd. For a cent you can get a bowl full of nice hot dog stew.

We are not to think that all Chinese live on puppies, cats and kites; it is only the poorest people who are obliged to live on such food. You would not be able to obtain much beef in China; but in the provision shops are excellent hams—salt, ducks, chickens and fish; and in the vegetable markets you can always find a supply of potatoes, beans, peas, and kum-poo, you find all the produce in the bowl of stew which the peddler sells.

To eat after the common manner you must hold the bowl to your lips and pick the food into your mouth; but if you would be genteel, you must pick up the bit of meat, the beans and peas with the chopsticks, and then drink the broth. If you want some tea you can have it without going to China in search of it, but in your own city, dining dinner with chopsticks.

If we were to try to eat (in houses of wealthy Chinamen, and were invited to dinner, we should be three or four hours at the table, and have at least three hundred different dishes containing food placed before us. I dined one day with a mandarin, or rather we had only a lunch—and there were so many dishes, and such a variety of food, that I lost all reckoning of the number. First we had roasted pumpkin seeds, then drank some cherry cordial, then ate some sweet cakes and drank several cups of delicious tea—not such meagre stuff as we get in the United States—but the very best China afford. Then the waiter brought in a great variety of dishes. Some of the food was sweet to the taste and good, and other dishes a small satisfaction. We should have had an uncomfortable time if we had undertaken to eat heartily of every dish brought on by the waiter. That is the left hand at a great dinner where three hundred kinds are served for the guests. The Chinese drink a great deal of tea at their dinner parties, but they do not have wines or champagne. The guests are able to walk straight, and talk straight as well, which some people in this country are not able to do after a dinner. We think of the Chinese as uncivilized, but they do not make boys of them, but they are getting drunk, and then in their drunkenness, commit horrible crimes—by beating their wives and children, or shooting their best friends.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,
For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. It is of its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. This hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness cured, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by its application. Instead of losing the hair, a healthy scalp, and a healthy scalp, will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling out, and from those deleterious humors which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. It would naturally be for
