

...the writer: 'I have twenty years of land that has been in my hands for twenty years; out from two to three tons of hay to the acre; has been sown with clover from three to four hundred bushels of manure a year; it is good heart and clean; could raise from 50 to 75 bushels of corn if it was not for the white grub which usually takes it in July. The soil is rich, and the drainage is good. I want to know how to keep it in this condition. There are two ways in which it may be done. The best, in the opinion of the expert, is not to use any manure, but to keep it in this condition. The second way is to use manure, but to keep it in this condition. The first way is to use manure, but to keep it in this condition. The second way is to use manure, but to keep it in this condition.

There are not, indeed, a thousand or two thousand bushels of roots for market. This is a sort of farming on paper, that will necessarily be subject to vicissitudes, according to local circumstances and habits, but the principle which underlies it, viz., that excessive crops are produced by heavy manuring, and not by the wide area, is a perfectly sound one; and no one who follows the indications herein laid down, will be disappointed by the result.—American Agriculturist.
