AN INTERESTING MOTOR TRIP

boundary of the original camp on a smooth road built of the yellow clay which abounds in the section. The soldiers who used to hike this distance on a forest trail would appreciate it, but the present companies are provided with a narrow gauge railroad for the trip.

The New Jersey sand is not like our beach sand of a coarser texture looking from a distance like crumbled cement. We drove for miles thru huckleberry and cranberry bogs on a road as straight as a string to Lakehurst where we visited the U. S. Naval airfield. Here we took our last look at the big dirigible Los Angeles which is being scrapped in the hangar there.

We looked over Princeton University, but since no vehicles are allowed on the campus, we did our sightseeing from the edges. From here, where we saw one of Washington's headquarters, straight along our way into western Pennsylvania the roadside was dotted with bronze tablets, marking events of the Revolutionary and Civil War. We did the customary sight-seeing at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, including the Navy Yards and Fort McHenry, made famous by Key's "Star Spangled Banner." At the fort we saw a flagpole at the original site of the flag referred to in his song. Later we saw the flag itself in the Smithsonian Institute. We were in Baltimore in the morning and saw long streets of brick apartments with white marble or wooden steps similar to those in Philadelphia. At almost every doorway were women on their knees with scrubbing brush and pail, at their daily task of making these steps snowy white.

We felt the noted Southern hospitality at several stopping places. We spent our nights variously, in hotel, cabin, tourist room or tent. Prices varied. At one place along the Chesapeake our hostess expressed her ideas of the colored race. From New Jersey on, we had seen more and more negroes and the we knew the southern feeling this was the first time we heard it expressed. She remarked during our conversation: "I have heard that in the North, negroes are allowed to attend school with whites, even to eat in the same restaurants but it is not right." We became accustomed to the sign on shabby eating places where negroes were served "Snowballs here." We ate delicious fried chicken and ham but did not sample the oysters and crabs for which the state is famous.

We encountered all prices for gas. The tax varied from four cents in New York to five cents in Maryland and six cents in West Virginia. Tourist lodgings and fine cabins were numerous thru eastern Maryland and Viriginia, also in the West Virginia mountains but none in eastern or western Pennsylvania or New Jersey. Just south of Philadelphia we passed extensive refineries belonging to the Gulf Co., where a strike was in progress. Mounted police were everywhere keeping order among the strikers. Near Christ church in Philadelphia was a parade of strikers carrying placards in the vicinity of a cigar factory. Higher wages was their demand.

We crossed northern Virginia thru a beautiful farming section. Here is the home of fine horses and beef cattle. In the Shenandoah Valley homes are of colonial architecture with tall pillars such as one sees in pictures. In contrast, thru the Blue Ridge Mountains and West Virginia most farm buildings are poor. Houses are of one or two rooms without cellars and barns are mere shacks. We saw quite a number of occupied log cabins with dirt chinked in the cracks. Sheep and dogs are widely raised tho in the rockiest part of the mountains, we observed one snake farm advertising 25 varieties of reptile including rattlers. The region looked as if the crop might be abundant.

The mountains afforded splendid views of wooded slopes rising one after another and glimpses of deep valleys between. In several places the elevation was marked over 2,800 feet, but the highest one we reached was 2,970 feet in the narrow part of western Maryland. Near here we paused to allow the masculine portion of the family to explore a bituminous coal mine as far as they were allowed without permit.

In southwestern Pennsylvania near Uniontown, we found an unexpected bit of interest in seeing Washington's rebuilt Fort Necessity and nearby a very complete free museum. We drove north along the west bank of the Monongahela to Pittsburgh. This meant a coast down to the river level for each of the frequent mining towns then a stiff climb out to the top again. In Pittsburgh, we went thru the Liberty Tunnel which is cut thru a hill for about a mile and a half. It is electrically lighted and apparently the minimum speed thru it is 40 miles an hour, with few dropping to the minimum. As we drew north from Pittsburgh, the mines gradually became less frequent and we began to feel less gritty and dusty. We skirted the eastern edge of the Allegheny State Forest altho we might have taken a slightly longer route directly thru it.

Upon reaching Kane, Pa., we stopped to see the Lobo wolves of which we had heard much. These sixty or more government owned animals are the only ones of their kind in the world and are well worth a visit. Because of their extreme destructiveness all others have been exterminated. Very few of the young can be saved because they remain savage, but an occasional one is tractable enough to add to the pack.

North of this we reached the oil country with which we were already familiar. In the neighborhood of Bolivar and Allentown the pumping wells are separated by only a few rods and the hillsides are a network of pipes. We were on familiar ground now, but before reaching home we saw one more extensive industry, the fruit orchards of Central New York. Had we noted the manufactures in cities we passed thru we could have visited hundreds of concerns and watched the process of making goods but even the natural resources observed were in no small variety.

Little White Church

Oh, little White Church at Independence
How your tall spire pierces the dusk ere dawn,
Out of the darkness into life's sunshine
Lead thou God's great army of men ever on.

Over a century you've stood as a landmark,
Watched o'er God's children in life's early Spring,
On thru the Summer and Autumn untiring,
Giving example to make them mighty men.

Oh, little White Church at Independence,
There 'neath your shadow in Winter they sleep,
Down thru the ages as others you lead on,
Forget not their souls, as holy vigil you keep.

Oh, little White Church, not a century but centuries
May you withstand all the changes of time,
Helping, consoling, leading the poor
Until the day God shall call them home. —U. V. Davis, 1934.

First Alfred Game Saturday Night

With brilliant prospects for an outstanding season, a powerful but rather light Alfred University team of gridiron huskies opens the season Saturday night under the floodlights of Merrill Field against strong Defiance University of Ohio.

Under the guidance of head coach John E. Galloway and line coach James A. McLane, the team has undergone two weeks of gruelling practice in preparation for the invading outfit. Apparently, if past scrimmages may be taken as a criterion, they are in perfect condition and ready to tangle.

In this third year of competition between Alfred and Defiance, the lads from Ohio will endeavor to break the spell that has held them to defeat at the hands of the Saxons for the two previous seasons. Defiance can always be counted upon to produce a rugged courageous team and this game on Saturday will be by no means a push-over.

Five Guilty Pleas In County Court

Five persons, indicted by the September Grand Jury, were before Judge Walter N. Renwick in a special session of county court Friday, and all pled guilty. Four were given suspended sentences.

Florence A. Aldrow Russell of Centerville, 27 years old, admitted she had married Archie Tisdale recently without being divorced from her first husband, Robert R. Russell of Grant street, Buffalo, with whom she lived but four months following their union May 2, 1927. She thought she had the right to marry again as seven years had elapsed. She was sentenced to one and one-half to three years in Attica State prison. She had been at liberty on bail following her arrest in June.

Orin W. Swain, Canaseraga, 24 years old, confessed to burglary, third degree, in the robbery of a barn while intoxicated. His parents were in court with him. He was given a one year's suspended sentence to Monroe county penitentiary and put on probation to Deputy Sheriff Floyd E. Young, Canaseraga, for five years.

Myrle H. Gordon, 24; Otto E. Gordon, 28, and Frederick H. Yost, 36, Almond, charged with burglary, third degree, were allowed to plead guilty to petit larceny as the crime only concerned eight chickens. All had records of previous arrests. They were given a nine months' suspended sentence to Monroe county penitentiary and paroled to Sheriff Edson A. Brigham for three years. Yost, who has been in jail here for some three months, was turned over to State police to face similar charges in Steuben county court. He drew a straight 60 days at hard labor and $20 fine from the Steuben court.

Wood Chopping Contest

Again we want to remind you of that wood chopping contest and demonstration by Peter McLaren.

Four or five of our local wood choppers have stated their intentions to enter this contest. Remember, the field is open to all comers, no charge for entering and there is a prize of $50 for the contestant who can chop off the log in 33⅓% longer time than it takes McLaren to do it. In these days of hard times that would be a great help, so come on you wood choppers, and win that prize.

As an extra incentive for you to come out and see the fun, we are going to have every man over 18 years of age register and at the close of the contest we have a drawing and the one drawing the lucky number will be given absolutely free a new double-bitted Plumb Axe.

Of course you are busy with your work just now, but it will pay you to take a little time off next Wednesday, Oct. 3rd and see this contest, which will be staged at 3:30 p. m.

Remember there is a 33⅓% handicap in your favor and the only restriction against you is the make of axe. McLaren uses a Plumb Axe and you may use any other make except the one he uses.

Daily Household Helps

1.—Mouse Traps should be thoroughly scalded and aired after catching one or two mice. Otherwise the mouse will get the scent of the more unfortunate relative and keep away from the trap.

2.—To solve the problem of marks on your floors from roller casters, remove casters from furniture and roll a piece of adhesive tape around the outside of the caster. It acts like a rubber casing and prevents marks on the hardwood floor.
