MEMORIAL DAY

NEXT Monday is Memorial Day. What does it mean in Andover today? There seems to be a lack of interest and enthusiasm in the proper observance of the day, as compared with what it was 40 years ago. Then Memorial Day was known generally as "Decoration Day." It was a day which seemingly all patriotic citizens were proud to observe by cessation from their usual toil, and joining the throng in the village; attending the G. A. R. services at the cemetery, and immediately following filling the theatre and listen to patriotic addresses given by the very best speakers the county could afford.

Memorial Day was the thought and inspiration of the Grand Army of the Republic. There was, 40 years ago, a strong G. A. R. Post in Andover, numbering some 50 members. With the passing of Comrade John Deming during the past year, the last Civil War veteran has gone from this community to his reward. The local American Legion has attempted to keep the enthusiasm and patriotic spirit alive in Andover, but the old fervor seems to be on the wane.

This is not only true in Andover, but thruout the county in general. Press reports from town after town tell of the discontinuing of Memorial Day parades and services—simply a decoration of the graves of deceased comrades with flags and flowers.

Does this apathy indicate a loss of the patriotic spirit, a lessening of the appreciation of the American people for the deeds of valor wrought by the valiant soldiers who fought and died that we might enjoy the blessings of a free country; or is it just sheer selfishness, that puts personal immediate pleasure ahead of sentiment and reverence for the heroes of the past?

It may be that this old writer does not interpret the modern 20th Century spirit correctly. We hope that is so. But we cannot help feeling that [illegible] people are losing some of the spirit of [illegible] by the lessening and fading [illegible] spirit.

The 49th State

HAWAII, isn't it true, skies, [illegible] and [illegible] everything!

Everything? Well, perhaps there's just one more thing—the right of statehood. Shall Hawaii become the 49th state? That question asked with increasing insistence in recent months, is currently agitating the land of grass skirts and foaming waves. Keystone of America's Pacific defense, sugar-bowl to millions of American families, oasis for America's rich, Hawaii is daily playing a more and more important role in American life, a role which seems to justify the right of statehood.

Why is Hawaii not a state? The prime reason can be found in the 40 per cent of her population owing allegiance to their mother country, Japan. Picture the key to Pacific defense dominated by a block of citizens owing allegiance to a foreign country, but possessing the rights of American citizenship! Picture the military and naval might of Hawaii surrounded by a civil government dominated by Japanese voters!

As long as the clouds of a possible Pacific war hang low over Diamond Head, the Hawaiian Islands, despite their pineapples, sugar, surf-boards, flowers, volcanoes, and Waikiki sands, are destined to remain, at least in the eyes of the Federal Government, just pawns in a naval chess game. As long as that condition remains, statehood for Hawaii, much as she seems to deserve it, is just a mirage on the tropic horizon.

Roosevelt and the Press

WALTER LIPPMAN makes the debatable assertion that the relations of the Roosevelt administration and the press would be more amicable if the administration leaders had been more forthright in their motives and methods. The statement is debatable because some metropolitan papers have adopted a premeditated policy of damning anything and everything the administration does, regardless of merits. Some of them apparently follow a set policy of printing at least one anti-Roosevelt editorial a day. A different attitude by the administration might have helped, but assuredly it would not have altered the course of those whose policy has long since lost its reason and has become a matter of prejudice and emotion.

Mr. Lippman refers to the campaign against the reorganization bill which he, among a few other able observers, favored. The principal campaign against this measure was conducted by an organization headed by a man who also owns a chain of newspapers. He stepped outside his role of a newspaper proprietor to wage an independent national campaign of alarm by letter and telegram. He had a perfect right to do so, but what would Greeley, Dana and Pulitzer have thought of an editor who confessed the impotence of his editorial columns and utilized telegrams and letters as a substitute in shaping public opinion? Metropolitan newspapers were almost unanimous in joining the chorus. The administration saw a bill defeated for reasons quite apart from the merits of the bill itself.

There was a natural resentment by the administration and its partisans, and not all of its partisans possess undiluted wisdom. Senator Minton introduced his preposterous bill to make the publication of an untrue statement a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment. Since truth is a matter of opinion, his bill was directed against the expression of opinion contrary to his own. Immediately the journalistic pack was upon him. He has been denounced as a dolt and a villain from coast to coast, and the animosity of the press toward the administration has reached a fantastic stage. Nothing is gained by Senator Minton's recent statement that his bill was only a jest and that he does not intend to press for its passage.

The public, which should have faith in both its press and its politicians, is confused and mistrustful. The administration could have helped by a more conciliatory attitude, but the press also could have helped by permitting its cerebrum rather than its bile to dictate its analysis of the new deal and its critics.

Land on Sit-Down Strike

SIT-DOWN strikes are very popular with vast areas of land. Millions of acres have been on a sit-down strike for years. Some of these striking areas have been returned to profitable employment thru reforestation, but the measures thus far taken are only a beginning, and we should not be lured into complacency by the fact that we have made a start. The work should be completed. All land that can be used for the production of forest growth both for timber and for wildlife habitat, which cannot be used for agriculture, should be removed from the sit-down strike class, and given a job, says the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University.

It is not hard to understand that unproductive land is a tax burden, and being a tax burden is a menace to productive acres because producing acres must bear the cost of supporting idle acres. These non-producing areas also curtail proper industrial and economic programs because money is tied up in such inactive areas and becomes idle capital. Forest land, if properly managed, is comparatively stable in value, less subject to value fluctuations than almost any other community or state asset. We should make up our minds to call off the sit-down striking acres and no longer permit them to remain a drag upon business prosperity.

There are still more than three million acres of land in New York State classified as idle or abandoned farm land for which nothing is planned. Foresters and sportsmen should get together and plan for the acquisition and use of these areas and present it to the Legislature. Such action undoubtedly would meet public approval. It is an essential step toward the solution of our idle land problem.

We call rich relatives the kin we love to touch.

HOW, WHAT AND WHY?

Special to the Andover News

The Andover News has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one postcard. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Troubled With Termites

F. J. P., writes: "We are having some trouble with termites. What method should be used in controlling them?"

Dr. R. W. Leiby of the entomology department answers: "We are sending you information on the habits and control of termites in a special mimeographed bulletin, number E-310. If you have other questions, after reading this, please write for additional help."

Permanent Hay Crops?

S. W. asks: "Do you have information on permanent hay crops?"

Professor G. H. Serviss of the agronomy department replies: "It is very doubtful if we have any such thing as a permanent hay crop.

"It's true that we have permanent pastures and also true that we could cut hay from bluegrass for a number of years by means of heavy and frequent applications of manure and commercial fertilizer. Under average farm conditions hay produced in such a way would cost more than it is worth.

"In many instances, tho, an additional year or two can be profitably added to the life of a clover and timothy seeding by top dressing with manure and superphosphate or superphosphate and some form of nitrogen. In fact, if you have a meadow with a real good timothy sod that you plan to plow, in view of high seed prices, you might well wait another year and top dress it in the spring and [illegible] the alfalfa when seeding the mixture. It is the nearest thing to a permanent hay crop that we have, but even alfalfa has to be reseeded occasionally. At the present time the College of Agriculture is doing considerable work with possible long-time meadow mixture and is getting some promising results."

The insurance agent had arrived at the applicant blank stage of his sales presentation. "Have you ever had appendicitis?"

"Well," answered the applicant, "I was operated on, but I'm not yet sure whether it was appendicitis or professional curiosity."

CROWN PRINCE RUDOLF

The Pillows of the Crown Prince Were Stained With Blood

On a cold, foggy morning, shortly before sunrise, in January, 1889, three pistol shots rang out in the hunting lodge of Rudolf, the Crown Prince of the mighty Austro-Hungarian Empire.

Rudolf's friends, who had been spending the night under his roof, knocked and pounded excitedly on the door leading to the royal bedchamber. Hearing no response, they quickly pried the door off its hinges and dashed into the room.

The sight that greeted their eyes made them gasp with horror. The room was in wild disorder. The Crown Prince Rudolf, fully dressed, even to his hunting boots, lay across the bed, with the top of his head blown off. Beside him lay the woman he loved. She had been killed by a bullet in her temple.

Did Rudolf shoot his sweetheart and then commit suicide? Or did some third party murder both of them? No one knows. The dark secret of that royal tragedy will probably never be solved.

Only two friends were in the hunting lodge when the shooting occurred. Prince Philip of Coburg and Count Hoyos, and they both thought it was suicide. They knew—almost everyone in Vienna knew—that Crown Prince Rudolf was unhappily married.

He had married the golden haired Princess Stephanie, daughter of the King of the Belgians. But he didn't love her and she didn't love him. The marriage had been forced upon them for political reasons. For years they had been estranged. She occupied his apartments; and he was madly jealous of his mistress, a other women.

In 1888, the year before his death, he met Baroness Marie Vetsera, a charming, vivacious young woman, with blood of the old Greeks coursing thru her veins. She was 19; he was 29; and they fell romantically, erotically, in love.

The flaming love affair startled even the scandal-hardened drawing rooms of Vienna, and the rumblings of it reached the stern old Emperor, Franz Joseph. At first he winked at the alliance. But the flagrant affair persisted. It became a public scandal. So Franz Joseph called his son Rudolf to the palace and told him this wild, illicit love affair had to stop.

But Rudolf defied the old Emperor, swearing that he would never give up Marie. In fact, he wanted to renounce all claim to the throne, divorce his wife and marry Marie. But the old Emperor flew into a fearful rage of denunciation.

So Rudolf and Marie often met secretly, after that, at his hunting lodge nesting among the pine trees 30 miles away from the prying eyes and wagging tongues of Vienna.

And there they had gone again on that fatal week in January, to steal a few happy days of love, when suddenly three pistol shots rang out—and altered the course of history.

Rudolf was buried with regal pomp and splendor among his Hapsburg ancestors, who had ruled Austria for six centuries. But the body of his sweetheart was tossed into a clothes basket and put in the butler's pantry at the hunting lodge, and left there unattended and unnoticed, for several days.

Finally, she was buried, at night, in a lonely monestery, deep in the heart of a dense pine forest.

The monks placed her body in a crude pine coffin made of rough slabs. The hat that she had worn so gayly as she came to her love tryst with Rudolf, was placed under her head for a pillow.

The mournful wind, sighing among the pine trees, was her only requiem.

Harnett Warns Holiday Motorists

"Death patrols the highways," State Commissioner of Motor Vehicles Charles A. Harnett today cautioned the many motorists making preparations for motor trips over the Memorial Day week-end.

"This Memorial Day observance will be a three-day holiday for many, a two-day holiday for those who may not be quite so fortunate, but in any event, it will find a great many cars on the highways," Commissioner Harnett explained.

"While we do not like to preach 'holiday safety sermons,' we know from past experience that an expert brand of driving will be needed to avert the record of fatalities and injuries which have come to mark so many holidays. Last year in this state, 33 persons lost their lives in traffic accidents over the Memorial Day week-end and this figure does not include those who later died from injuries.

"With traffic arteries thruout the State crowded with holiday travel, the motorist must be patient and courteous if forced to wait in line. He must be persistently alert and drive with extreme care and intelligence at all times. It should be kept in mind that survival and avoidance of accidents is not a matter of ordinary care, but of sharp and constant attention."

Mr. Harnett also emphasized the great increase in night accidents and urged motorists whenever possible to return from their trips on Tuesday morning, thus relieving the highway congestion on Monday evening.

Children's Health Camp Will Open July 5th

The Children's Health Camp at Cuba Lake will open July 5th for the usual eight-week season, according to Mrs. F. W. LeClere, camp director. The camp is conducted by the Allegany County Public Health and Welfare Association, Inc., the object of which is the prevention of tuberculosis and other diseases.

It is open, without charge, to any child between the ages of 5 and 12 who for any reason need a special course of physical building up. Children of the following classifications are received:

Undernourished or malnourished children who show a low resistance to infections and who are frequently out of school on account of colds and other infections, and children who are or have been in contact with cases of tuberculosis in their homes but who themselves are not active cases of tuberculosis.

The camp cared for 212 children last year, an increase of 77 children over the preceding year. It is hoped that an equal number can be cared for this year. The camp will operate in three periods, a total of two months. Some of the children, however, who are in special need of this type of care will remain during more than one period.

Applications for admission to the camp should be made at once to the association's office in Friendship. Application blanks and further information will be sent on request. Last year many children who greatly needed the camp benefit could not be accepted because all places had already been promised.

Medical examination is required before admission and no child suffering from any communicable disease will be accepted. A thoro physical examination and study will be made of each child during their stay at camp. A number of applications are already on file at the association's office.
