Safety Insurance

With wartime labor shortages bringing elderly people more and more into the spotlight, Dr. Helen D. Bull, professor of home economics at Cornell, suggests several ways to protect and increase the health and safety of old people.

Falls represent one of their greatest hazards. Although only five per cent of the population is over sixty, three-fifths of the victims of falls are in this group.

Dr. Bull points that many of these falls could be prevented by a few simple precautions: Make dark hallways light; remove slippery scatter rugs from the floors; mend broken steps; provide sturdy stair rails; do not put a high polish on wood floors.

The bath tub seems to be a dangerous part of the household equipment and special measures may be needed to make it safe. Provide a rubber mat for the bottom of the tub to prevent slipping, and have handles on the wall nearby to grasp in getting in and out of the tub.

Off Again — On Again

Research workers have been experimenting again with cooking vegetables in a kettle with the lid on and off. They've partly disapproved the old theory of cooking with the lid off to let volatile acids escape. It seems that a cover on the kettle helps the vegetables to cook faster. And the more study that's done, the more evident it becomes that vegetables should be cooked quickly to save food value and to hold their original color.

Get Ready to Store Canned Foods

With the thick of the canning season near, your shelves should be ready for easy and efficient storage of 1945's food supply. It is best to have shelves just the right height for different sized jars or cans, with about a two-inch space above the jars to allow for air circulation and convenient handling. Set the shelves about 9½ inches apart for quarts and about 7½ inches apart for pints. Tin cans may be piled one on top of the other to save space.

Arrange the jars on the shelves so that last year's food is moved to the front where it will be used first. If shelf space is at a premium and you have to store filled jars in boxes, be sure they are kept in a cool, dark and dry place.
