Conservation Dept. Cracks Down On Violators

Albany, Nov. 4.—Despite repeated warnings by the N. Y. State Conservation Department that it had put on an intensified drive against violators of the Conservation Law many lawbreakers have to learn through their pocketbooks, Commissioner Perry B. Duryea said when reporting on scores of cases just settled.

Out of more than 189 cases prosecuted (many others are awaiting action) with fines totaling $5,226, deer-law violations topped the list and were most expensive, 36 lawbreakers paying $2,405. A close second on the pocketbook at $862.50 was 17 pheasant cases. There were 23 fines totaling $490, for carrying loaded rifles in automobiles and 21 for hunting without a license amounting to $327.50. Other types of violations brought fines totaling $1,141. One Long Island offender drew a 25-day jail sentence for trespass.

"Our concentrated campaign against conservaation-law violators will be carried on throughout the year," Commissioner Duryea emphasized. "We intend to show wilfull offenders that we mean business."

If grease in a frying pan should catch fire, use a handful of salt of baking soda to extinguish it; water spreads the flame.
