Rev. MacDougald Lauds Book

turns on their investment. Perhaps the best testimonial that is found in Mrs. Sheppard's presentation of J. V. Thompson is in his trust of others. Personally, we have the feeling that one who trusts others is himself to be trusted.

Some interesting chapters are devoted to the rise to power of John L. Lewis and the strike of a few years ago. Another significant allusion of Mrs. Sheppard's, in this connection, is that to "Old King Cole."

Coming back to the interesting character heretofore mentioned. Much of the early days has been forgotten by the people, some of whom lost some of their savings in the financial crash of J. V. Thompson, but his spirit still lives and he has become a legend of the coke region. The Friendship Hill Association now owns the mansion once occupied by J. V. Thompson and his wife "Honey."

The "Kaleidoscope" chapter contains an interesting account of the Mother House of the Sisters of Saint Basil the Great. This is J. V. Thompson's old house. The August pilgrimage which started nine years ago when 300 people were attracted to the Home has gained in interest until, in 1946, thousands of automobiles conveyed 60,000 people to the mount.

Lack of space forbids a too lengthy consideration of the book and this reviewer feels incapable of doing the book the justice it deserves but to the one at all interested in the sub-soil of this fair land of ours; to the one interested in the mining industry; to the one interested in the "Wonderful Keystone State"; to the one who enjoys acquaintance with an actual character such as J. V. Thompson; and to the one seeking wholesome entertainment in interesting and informative reading, this book, as well as the first one of Mrs. Sheppard's, is wholeheartedly recommended.

A leak in a water main on Chestnut street necessitated village workmen to dig up a portion of the new state highway to make repairs Tuesday.

Willing Township has the honor of being first to go over the top in the Red Cross drive in this area. Mrs. H. Lyle Temple was chairman of the Willing drive.

In a year when more motor vehicles covered more miles than ever before, New York state had the lowest motor vehicle death toll on record in 1947, with the exception only of the limited-travel war years of 43-44-45. Motor Vehicle Commissioner C. J. Fletcher reports, but the number of non-fatal injuries in 1947 was the greatest since 1931.

WANDERING WITH WILLIE

It was a swell vacation we had, and we figured on sleeping a while longer but some folks are being more or less insistent on hearing from us so here goes for another trip. The last customer to blame us for being lax with a pen was Ray O'Laughlin who came clear from Coleman, Michigan to give us a little personal hell, and after reminiscing a bit we realize that it has been a long time since we scribbled. (And while reminiscing, we think it was about the time of Rev. Charley Keller's silver jubilee banquet here that we laid down on the writing job.) Anyhow Raymee was there decked out in his best pin-stripe and we remember that he is the only gent we ever knew who can sit down in a dignified manner on a white seven-minute frosted cake and get up still looking dignified. We just can't recall who put the cake on the chair and we didn't intend to mention it at all, so will say no more about it, Ray.

But besides being a bit lazy, another reason we stopped writing this column was that we had too many folks who wanted us to give their neighbors a dig, or take a rap at the city fathers, or put in a nice writeup about the way some folks "carried on" and a dozen other things that this column was not intended for in the first place. When we first started this little department several years ago it was all in fun, and as far as we are concerned that's the way it's going to remain. If, in our opinion, anyone deserves commendation in our fair village, we will give it but it has never been our intention to delve into the petty scrimmages of folks who don't like anything or anybody. Get the drift?

The Son of God rode into town
A cheering crowd around him:
Men waving Palms, men warbling psalms
A happy throng surrounding Him.
In tears, in triumph, silent, strong,
Radiantly He rode along.
Jerusalem thus found Him.
The Son of man walked out of town,
A jeering crowd around Him:
Men haunting Him, men taunting Him,
A howling throng surround Him.
In trust, in triumph, silent, strong,
Radiantly He walked along.
And Calvary thus found Him.
Jerusalem and Calvary,
Still seeing His supremacy,
In royal robes have gowned Him.
