Home Demonstration Week

The 76,000 New York State women who are members of organized home demonstration units ganized home demonstration units tion Week May 2-8.

They join more than one million women throughout the United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico in expressing their thanks for a program which has enriched their lives and made their household tasks easier and more enjoyable.

They are holding special meetings and exhibits to let others know about their accomplishments; they are honoring 24,000 volunteer workers in New York State who have helped spread information; and through radio and newspapers, they emphasize the opportunities in extension work to bring about better understanding of public problems.

Fifty-two New York State counties and three cities—Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse—have organized home demonstration work under supervision of college-trained agents and assistant agents. But the agents, with offices at central locations, are ready at all times to help any woman, city or rural, with her homemaking problems.

Any woman who doesn't take advantage of this extensive project in adult education is missing a golden oportunity.

Don't Leave The Leaves

Do you waste the outer green leaves of vegetables? Those leaves are rich in food value and can be used in a number of ways.

Shred the outer leaves of cabbage and lettuce to use in salads; or chop and cook them if they're tough. Cook the tender leaves of cauliflower and broccoli along with the rest of the vegetable. Add celery leaves, fresh or dried, to flavor soups, sauces and dressing. And young beet and turnip tops are tasty vegetables when fresh. Cook them; don't throw them out.

Dad — And His Job

Edward Pope, Cornell extension specialist in child development and family relationships, brings out a different slant on why father should mind his "P's and "Q's" while the children are small and conduct himself as a shining example.

"To the 'young child," says Mr. Pope, "father represents 'man' — all men."

Father is the first man his youngsters know, and for several years, probably the only man they know. If he is kind and generous and companionable, they see all mankind through the rosy glow of his personality. But if father is merely a disagreeable disciplinarian, his child's attitude toward the rest of the word's men may be tinged with dislike if not fear.

Something to think about, eh dad?

Announces Farm Labor Program for 1948

New York, May 4.—Farmers and food processors who will use the facilities of the State Employment Service to secure workers should place their orders with their nearest Employment Service office as soon as possible, Nelson F. Hopper, superintendent of Farm Placement said today discussing the agency's plans to meet this year's farm labor problem.

"The early receipt of orders from farmers and food processors will give the Employment Service the advance information it needs to insure an adequate supply of labor," said Mr. Hopper. "And the more information employers give us when submitting their order, the better service we can render. In addition to specifying the number and kind of workers needed, employers should also state the expected dates of employment, the kind of work to be done, the wages to be paid, and the general conditions of employment. Orders can be revised, of course, if weather or other conditions alter the time schedule or crop prospects."

Lots of Work on Acre of Spuds

On New York cost account farms, which are better than average, it took about 93 hours for the farmer to grow, harvest, store, and market one acre of potatoes, according to a Cornell economic study by N. B. Tablante. Yields on these farms average 226 bushels an acre in the 1942-45 period.

Digging and picking took up about half the total time, and storing and marketing more than one-fifth of the total. About 27 hours of labor were required to handle an acre up to harvest.

About one-third of the year's work was done in October, indicating the labor problem on a farm with a large acreage of potatoes.

It cost about $174 to grow, harvest, and market an acre of potatoes during this period. The farms averaged 29 acres of potatoes, and the farmers used an average of 23 bushels of seed an acre. Growing costs accounted for two-thirds of the total cost. Largest single item, seed, claimed one-fifth of the total.
