Dean Explains Farm Value of Savings Bonds

"I believe in this progarm".

This is the reason Dr. W. I. Myers, dean of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell University, accepted the chairmanship of the State Agricultural Advisory Committee in the Savings Bond "Security Loan Drive".

"Farm people", Dean Myers said, "need a financial reserve not only for repairs and replacements and as insurance against current hazards like crop failures and ravages of plant and animal diseases, but also as a hedge aginst possible lower prices.

"No one knows what the future trend of farm prices will be. However, each previous major war has eventually been followed by a drastic drop in the general price level and a severe depression. Savings Bonds are the best hedge against this."

Dr. Myers also pointed out that the land boom has set the stage for serious trouble, if deflation occurs, for farmers who went heavily in debt to buy farms. "This is not a good time to start farming for those who must go heavily in debt. Instead it is safer for young men to work for wages or rent until the future is more clear.

"The experience after World War I clearly indicates that a farm family will obtain greater security and satisfaction by building a financial reserve to protect what it has rather than enlarging holdings beyond the size needed for efficient operation.

"Purchase of Savings Bonds will provide the needed financial reserve strength for the uncertain future," said Dean Myers.
