KICKING COWS.

A writer in the New England Farmer says:—Many of our best cows come to be milked, and are fussy and cranky when you set the pail under them. This is particularly the case with the Jersey grades. Instances of this kind seem to be more numerous than formerly, and are most common in fairies kept under the forcing system adopted by those who supply milk the market or cheese factory. In many or perhaps most cases, cows become addicted to it after having been milked a few years; though quiet and gentle the first year of their milking. There is no doubt that the production of a large quantity of milk is often attended with a sensation of soreness and exhaustion in the lacteal parts, which induce a sensation of dread and dislike to be milked by the animal.—This is a case like this—and I think they comprise fully nine-tenths of the troublesome milkers—it is the worst kind of folly to abuse a cow for kicking.

When a cow becomes troublesome about milking, the best thing that can be done is to fasten the foot with a rope. Make the end of the rope fast behind her, take a wind and draw the foot a little back and tie with a half pitch.—Put a measure of shorts or some other provender before her, and then proceed carefully to milk, favoring her as she shows cringing or uneasiness. I know of something like a dozen cows in this neighborhood in this condition. Nearly all of them are superior milkers.—The extraction of a large pailful, twice a day, of a rich, highly vitalized fluid, like milk, can exert no other than an exhausting and debilitating influence on the animal. This on a nervous animal soon induces irritability and what we call vicious conduct. In old times our cows used to go dry three or four months, and with most of our old stock it was difficult to get much milk more than eight or nine months in a year—the tendency to beef predominating over that to milk in four or five months after calving. Such cows were quiet and seldom was it that any of them made objection to being milked in the yard or pasture. In our herds of large milkers, to-day, that are milked right up to calving time, not more than one out of four or five, can be induced to stand willingly, and give her milk when loose in the yard or field. No animal needs kind and careful treatment more than cows giving a large quantity of milk.
