Right or Wrong!

Hay Thermometers Available to Farmers

The following Agricultural teachers have on hand a hay thermometer and are ready to assist farmers to determine the temperature of hay to ascertain if it is reaching the "self ignition" point: Glenn Bronson, Andover; Julian Carter, Wellsville; Maynard Boyce, Scio; Roger Shaw, Friendship; E. F. McCauliff, Cuba; V. O. Linderman, Alfred; B. J. Koch. Belfast and Ed. Wilmot, Fillmore.

A hay tester is a simple device with a sharp pointed end into which a thermometer can be lowered. The iron pipe is driven into the hay and the thermometer lowered into the pipe. 185 degrees has been found to be the upper safe limit of temperature. If the temperature goes to 200 degrees action must be taken at once to bring about a lowering of the temperature or the removal of the hay.

The temperature of hot spots may be lowered by inserting a pipe into these spots and forcing carbondioxide gas down the pipe. Hay should not be removed from a mow without the aid of firemen as it may burst into flames.

Properly cured hay stored in a barn with a tight roof is relatively safe, but last year's costly fires proved that much of the hay stored was not properly cured. If you have any doubt about the hay you have stored, call one of the above listed men. They will be glad to check your mow.

Now, Really!

"Hilda," said Mrs. Suburbs to her maid-of-all-work, "that black hen is in the coal cellar again. Shoo her out. What do you suppose makes her neglect her nest to go poking in there all the time?"

"I dunno, ma'am," came Hilda's innocent reply. "Unless she's seen them ads in the paper 'Now is the time to lay in your coal'."
