The Plot Against Hawley.

CHAPTER I.

HOW THE PLOT ORIGINATED.

Near noon, the 5th of September, 1852, a man laboring under great excitement was walking hurriedly up Broadway, New York. His features were flushed and convulsed, his glance wild and restless, his whole mien indicative of keen anguish.

"Are you here, Ruth?" he called from the hall. A step was heard overhead, followed by the rattling of a dress, and a young lady descended the front stairs. Despite averted, points of marked contrast, there was a family likeness about the couple that proclaimed them to be brother and sister.

"Why, what's the matter, Luke?" cried the latter, starting at sight of the disturbed countenance that met her view. "Are you ill?" "I've just received bad news," replied the brother, leading the way into the parlor—"news which has given me a terrible shock."

"Checked?" "Yes," "What has happened?" "In a word, Clara Aymer is married!" "Married!" echoed the sister, recollecting, "Clara Aymer married! Is it possible?" "Yes, married! the girl I've been hying since for years past—the only girl I ever cared a pip for. Imagine the shock this event gives me. I'm nearly crazy."

"You're really loved her?" "Loved her! I must have worshipped her, or else this thing would not have so completely upset me." "Oh, as to that, the less of a thing always gives us an exaggerated notion of its value," said the sister philosophically, as she sank languidly into an easy chair, and smoothed out a fold in her shawl in a nervous way.

late father and to sympathizing favor that to his own merits.

Miss Ruth Pedder was two years younger than her brother, and consequently twenty-five years of age, although she owned to only twenty. She was tall, thin, and a little inclined to her outlines, as in her temper, to anger. She was not particularly bright, but she was bold and unscrupulous, and possessed a fierce energy which was capable of compensating in any emergency for lack of genius.

"I thought as much. And the sea is full of ferocious dangers. When do you sail again for Australia?" "In about two weeks—possibly in ten days, as the ship is filling up rapidly." "Hawley is thoroughly competent to be your first mate?" "Yes," replied the brother, and answered: "Oh course. I know of no better man for the post."

"I must have your first mate, then. You have influence enough with your owners, I hope, to turn out the present incumbent?" "Yes," she had just already vacated. Mr. Jarding was present called home suddenly to Ohio, on account of his father's illness.

"Perfectly. I learned the fact half an hour since from Hawley's commandant—Captain Gregg, you know. Captain Gregg was at the wedding. It took place last Friday evening—the very evening after Hawley's return from his last voyage to Rio. It was a quiet affair. Only a few friends were invited. But let me ask you a question. Did Hawley ever propose to you?"

"No. But I expected that he would soon do so. He has been here before." "Yes, he came several times to ask me for a berth in my clipper. I promised to think of him at the first opening, and I really mean to help him, for I know in a general way that you liked him."

"I thought he'd realize that you could be of service to him," exclaimed Miss Pedder. "I thought he'd remember that mother hit me this time, and a few thousand dollars to do as I pleased with. I was conscious, too, that I possessed a fair share of personal attractions. And as I suspected him to be a heartbreaker, I took it for granted that I should get on." His attentions seemed marked enough.

"He treated you politely of course," interrupted Pedder, "but he wouldn't have told me, after asking me to be his fiancée. But to never made any formal declaration." "I don't mind," said the other, "as mate of a ship is a position that involves a regular relationship. But I took it for granted."

"Pedder made an impatient gesture. "We've been carried away by our feelings. The girl's rejection of me was really intended to be final, and Hawley's visits here were merely to let her know that he still cared for her. But why Clara should prefer me to me I can't imagine," added Pedder, drawing himself up haughtily.

valid for the last ten years of her life, and will insisted on her using her former fortune.

It had been six months since he was relieved of that burden. His property, therefore, as you say—poor as Job's turkey." "Then he'll have to leave his darling Clara," asserted Miss Pedder venomously. "He'll have to leave himself from his deary in order to earn their mutual bread and butter. In short, he'll have to go to sea again."

"Well, yes, I suppose he will," asserted Pedder. "He can get better wages at sea than elsewhere. He'll sail again soon, no doubt." "I thought as much. And the sea is full of ferocious dangers. When do you sail again for Australia?"

"I must have your first mate, then. You have influence enough with your owners, I hope, to turn out the present incumbent?" "Yes," she had just already vacated. Mr. Jarding was present called home suddenly to Ohio, on account of his father's illness.

count upon him. The past here to ask me for it is now vain.

I will accordingly have it offered to him, just as nothing had happened. Exactly. You needn't speak of his marriage, or seem to know anything about it. You can simply let him go in the question, in accordance with the old understanding. And he will accept it. He can possibly have any suspicion of anything wrong. Outwardly and apparently we are all on good terms with one another, and will remain so. Let the wages offered him be liberal. Possibly he may object to leaving his young bride so soon, but the next voyage after this one—"

Pedder interrupted the remark by a gesture of impatience. "I need all my own eyes—all determination." "That next voyage after this one will not be yours," declared Hawley. "I shall accompany you on my very next trip. To make all sure on this point, I will have him engaged this very day. In fact, I will see to this now." He seized his hat and gloves, and
