KNOWING WHEN TO LEAVE

Rosemarie Baker

The social art of knowing when to leave is one that is hard to learn and difficult to put into use. We are always confronted with the problem of leaving a party, a dance, or any social function with a certain amount of gracefulness and poise. Too often, we say "Well, I must be going," and after a little urging, settle down for another hour or so. If this same procedure occurs too many times, our hostess hospitality will begin to wear and it will become harder to leave. When we say we are going, let's do so. Why wait for someone to urge us to stay?

The same principle applies when we are being interviewed by a prospective employer. When we answer the questions he asks us and if we are in doubt about something, ask a few ourselves, but let us never waste his time by questioning the man about unimportant trifles. Thanking him for interviewing us we must leave without further hesitation.

Suppose that we are spending the week-end with a friend. At the end of our stay, we are urged to remain a day or so longer. No matter how insistent our host is, we must not prolong our stay, except in very rare cases. We will never lose in popularity by leaving before our friends are ready to have us go. They may be sorry to be deprived of our presence but they won't think less of us for going.

The ability to sense the proper moment to depart is an im- . asset and one which is ..... al if we wish to be popular. Let us remember when we say we are leaving, to get up and le... and not linger on and on, because by doing so, we may be decreasing the desirability of our presence.

HARVEY

Ernest LaFollette

Yesterday I first met Harvey on the street. Since he looked so lonesome, I brought him to school with me and stuffed him into my locker before going to class.

Harvey did not like this however, and escaped from my locker. He then came to my room and I quickly hid him in my pocket. From my pocket he could see everything that was going on better than I and because of this he saw Lyle Slocum fiddling with a couple of pencils and paying little attention to class. Soon the bell rang which took us to English class. Harvey, again peeping out from my pocket witnessed the great struggles of Margaret Daley and Mary Lou Clark as they attempted to tell stories in front of the class. When the next bell rang we went to algebra class. This time Harvey hid in my desk, so he couldn't see too well, but he heard Ronnie Ellis and Jo Ann Marsh whispering to each other.

By now the noon hour had arrived. Harvey was then able to watch the mad rush for places in line in Mr. Conde's room. He saw many people trampled on by Carl Waters' big feet.

One o'clock in the afternoon brought Latin class when Harvey had a chance to witness the great brain of Beverly Hackett at work. The next period was a study hall in which Harvey watched Dale Pelton crawling under a table for a pencil. The next class was science where he saw Ronnie Ellis and Eadie Dunham talking over old times. Nothing much happened eighth period to remark about but at the end of the day Harvey was so tired that when I put him in my locker for the night he never stirred until today.

LOCALS TRIUMPH OVER ALLENTOWN

By Bob Baker

The Andover soccer team won its fourth game of the year Tuesday, October 19 when they coasted to a 6-1 trlumph over the Allentown team. Coach Chaffee substituted freely in the last three quarters.

Milligan, Mulconery and Lynch scored for Andover with Mulconery and Snyder getting the assists. This was the first real chance that some of the second string players have had to play this year but time after time they stove off scoring threats by the Allentown front line.

The school band played several numbers before the game and for the first time at a soccer game in Andover cheer leaders were in action.

The lineup for Andover included:

O.L. Snyder; I.L. Mulconery; C.F. Burgett; I.R. Lynch; O.R. Milligan; L.H. Wheaton; C.H. B. Nye; R.H. Sutor; L.F.B. Atwell; R.F.B. Baker; Goalie Carpenter.

Substitutions: K. Nye, LaFollette, Caple, Burger, Daley, Hancock, Jackson and Glover.

The boy in high school who picked up the most was Wayne Atwell who picked up 432 bushels.

In the grades Robert Sherman led the boys with a total of 400 bushels.

Crystal Reinard leads the girls by a total of 220 bushels.

CHIT-CHAT

How many of you kids are going to the Junior dance? You'd better come or I'll get "Cupe" after you.

My, but the Junior boys looked nice Friday, Monday and Tuesday. You're one ahead of the girls, why not keep it that way?

As all the Chit-Chat columns say just before a Friday night dance: "There will be a lot of familiar couples coming to the Junior dance." Some of them are: Nedra and Teddy, Frances and Marlin, Annabelle and Ralph Howard, Danjaan Crandall and Dick Hancock, Lois Honegger and Bob, and Peggy Howard and Vic Daley. Hope to see you all there.

We see Nedra Burrows was elected vice president of the Camera Club. Congratulations Nedra. Also congratulations to Carl Clark for being elected president. The new secretary is Phyllis Burger and the treasurer again this year is Lois Honegger. Congratulations to you too.

Well, well, Mary Ellen Connor is still planning to go to the dance. Jump for the opportunity, boys. Dean Fisher had better watch out or he'll lose her.

Aquinas Lynch had a very good time in Virginia, from reports. So he still loves you, eh, Aquinas?

Gloria Clair wants to go to the dance too, so don't be so slow, Jim Connor. Hint! hint!

Say, Maxine Filler, what has Wellsville got that Andover has not? Her answer is "Red" Burdick.

Everyone is wondering whether Teresa Padden and her heartthrob "Les" Baldwin will show up at the Junior dance. What about it, Teresa?

We see our new classmate Margaret Howard, has dropped her old flame and is starting a new fire with Ronnie Ellis.

Say, Matt Lynch, why didn't

Better Health For Children

A Community Service Issued by Children's Hospital of Buffalo, N. Y.

Every parent can do many things to prevent accidents to children in the home if they will remember that children of preschool age are consumed with curiosity about everything—even the most common household articles.

You will have to teach your child not to climb out of windows not to pull lamps off tables, not to turn on the gas, or to touch the hot stove, but if you can reduce the number of "dangerous" items in your home to a bare minimum you will find it more pleasant for both you and your baby—and safer, too!

Keep medicines (even aspirin) kerosene, gasoline, benzene, oil of wintergreen, lye, rat and insect poisons, acids and poison sprays from the garden all so well hidden—or so high out of reach—that there is no possible chance of the pre-school child finding them. Aspirin is included in this list, because harmless as it may be for adults, it can cause serious poisoning if a child eats too much of it.

If your child should eat any kind of poison, telephone your doctor at once, but if you cannot reach him quickly, don't waste any time on the telephone before inducing the child to vomit.

You can usually cause vomiting by sliding your finger down the child's throat and moving it in his throat until he gags. If you have syrup of ipecac, one teaspoonful will causse vomiting. He will vomit easier if you give him a glass of water or milk before making him gag. After you have made him vomit once, give him another glass of milk or water, and make him vomit again.

After he has emptied his stomach, try again to reach a doctor or take him to the nearest hospital.

If the child is old enough to drink something unpleasant, have him drink water with enough soap in it to make suds—or give him a glass of water with a teaspoon of salt added. Either of these drinks will prompt vomiting if you can get the child to drink them.

Don't take any chances with poisons. First, keep them out of reach! If a child does eat a poison, call your doctor immediately. If your doctor is unavailable at once, take the child to a hospital immediately where his stomach will probably be washed out. If any delay is unavoidable, then make the child vomit as described above.

Remember — these accidents can't happen unless a child can get hold of such poisons.
