ever ready to extend the hand of fellowship and brotherly love to all those who come here to escape the persecutions and oppression of European despots.

In view of these facts, I long for the better days; when calumny, vituperation, dissension and strife shall cease, when we can once more be men and brothers, engaged in the same glorious cause of freedom which has characterized our conduct in the past.

My dear Barnard, are you not looking forward with brighter hopes to the same tranquil future? I know you are. Although you are now one of the prominent actors on the political stage of action, your heart is, and always has been, in the right place.

I would exhort you to continue on in a regular way in which you began your editorial career. Your paper is and always has been, the faithful exponent of Republican democracy, and the champion of the people of the good county of Allegany.
