

We were above the region of plant life...

But still far above arose the snowy crest which we designed to climb...

At length the fresh snow became so deep, and further progress in the saddle so hazardous...

Suddenly, as we climbed, the western sky grew larger and more vast, increasing and growing as we clambered...

Spurred by our feet, heavy masses of snow sped eastward and westward down the mountain slopes...

Call not a mountain range the backbone of the earth; to man the world is not a being, but a dwelling...

But oh! how wonderful this mountain architecture—the unmarred handiwork of our God!
