VACATION BEGINS

Students are now preparing to enjoy their summer vacation.

To these students, the time has arrived for fun and relaxation, for freedom from school routine discipline, homework and examinations. Quickly and eagerly they take to this change to all-day play and outdoor life.

Parents see school days as necessary to the mental and educational growth of the child. Likely, we can look on his vacation days as essential to his healthy physical growth. Immediate benefits can be seen the first few days a child is home from school.

Although school days mean a certain amount of confinemet and deprivation of outdoor exercise, they do tend to foster regular habits of eating, sleeping, and cleanness among students.

Parents should realize the understandable tendency to allow things to slide during the summer months and help make the child's summer vacation the relaxing, refreshing and healthful experience it is meant to be.

TOT SPOT

Here I am again bringing you the last news of the school year on the tots of A.C.S.

Of the first grades, having perfect attendance, Bruce Vickers and Merton Wright in Mrs. Hall's room and Lois Reil in Mrs. Connor's room are the fortunate three. Also we wish to send our sympathy to Maxine Mead, who has the whooping cough and won't be back again this year, and to the Stocking family whose house was partially burned last Monday. Since all of the children's clothing were burned, a collection for new clothing has been taken up in the grades of these children. In Mrs. Hall's first grade Kenneth Heselton spent Sunday at Cuba Lake. In Mrs. Connor's room Merton Genung and Edward Greene visited Rochester Sunday. Also her room had a picnic yesterday.

Congratulations to Lynford Bledsoe for being highest in reading rating, and to Edward Green who was highest in number rating.

Birthday greetings to Betty Short of Mrs. Carmody's second grade, June 19. Also birthday greetings to Thelma Skinner whose birthday was June 19 and to Robert Barnhart whose birthday was June 19, both of whom are from Mrs. Helmer's third and fourth grades. Mrs. Helmer planned a picnic for her pupils Wednesday in the grove.

Mrs. Tompkins' second grade had their picnic Thursday.

Congratulations to Miss Jordan's fifth grade which has had perfect attendance for the past three days. Birthday greetings to Richard Stocking whose birthday was June 20 and to James Harvey whose birthday was June 20 also. James brought candy for the class on his birthday.

Diane Lewis of the sixth grade celebrated her birthday June 23. Also the class had their picnic Wednesday in the grove.

Kind lady to Carl Atwell whom she has just given a piece of candy: "What do you say, young man?"

Carl: "Got any more?"

"Oh, officer, I've lost my little girl!"

"What's she like?"

"Well, she has her father's nose, but otherwise she's the image of me when I was a child."

SALUTATORY

THE NEXT THREE YEARS

By Robert Baker

The method of preserving security in our nation is much different from that of past decades. Our security in it's earlier years was made possible by a series of policies whereby we severed contact with foreign countries. This was done at various times by practicing isolationism and then manifest destiny, each of which kept us separate from the rest of the world.

Our ideals of internationalism carried on today are entirely different but are made necessary by changing world conditions. Transportation facilities and communications have made insecurity for all as planes can fly over any nation in the world, drop bombs, and return to their home without refueling. The world is smaller and more insecure as apprehension has mounted since the close of World War II. This is partially due to the fact that we of the United States and other democratic countries have been drugged by our own illusions. While we were net yet awakened, Communist and socialist aggression took a tremendous step and formed its iron curtain over the countries of western Europe.

Right now, the Reds do not attack the West because they know that they do not have the superior strength. Stalin's invaders are waiting for us to go back to sleep; to invite attack.

At the present, our self defensive power is overwhelming. An attack upon us would be absurd. But, if we want it to continue this way we must do one of two things. We can continue building our defensive powers or we can be alert and on the watch for any aggressive actions on the part of the Reds. Certainly the more practical would be to remain awake and decrease this potential possibility of surprise. This should be undertaken, too, because it would be the logical point of concentration for communist forces.

Only a short time ago it looked as if that very thing was happening. No move was made toward recovery after the conquest of China and the Russian acquisition of the atomic bomb. Even when the foreign ministers of the United States, France, and Britain met, there was a feeling of disunion. Finally, it was Robert Schuman of France who broke the ice by proposing to merge the German and French steel industries.

This move has been talked of as the most far-reaching, and constructive act since the close of World War II. It was only the start. The move was then made to set up a Council of Atlantic Pact States to coordinate the cold war effort and on agreement to give more power to West Germany followed as a common goal. These decisions are good but there is still the possibility that it may have been a case of "too little, too late," for the good of free nations.

Further losses of land in Asia will cancel all gains made in the last four years anywhere. However, we of the West are now awake and there is still hope as long as we continue in motion. There is much ground to cover in the next three years if we are to get a defense to check the Red attack. We must get out of the planning stage for this important work and into action.

The tolerance of communist parties in many countries must be eliminated. More action must be taken along the lines of the proposed Schuman plan if we are to continue to unite the countries of Europe in a common cause. However, we must not consider Europe as our only problem. The remaining free countries of Asia must be saved from the clutch of communism if a spark of democracy is to remain in a part of the world where already freedom is almost forgotten or has never been known. Already one of the largest nations has fallen to the Reds, and there is the possibility of other changes in types of government.

Only by keeping the majority of the world free and thinking of democracy in the next few years can we prevent the spread of communism. Prosperity and content are the answer for it is when people are in the midst of a period of hard times that the rosy views of communism and socialism appeal to them. Desperate and hungry, they are willing to permit government control if only they will be able to live again as they should.

Let us consider the incident which is right now happening in Great Britain and has been ever since World War II. Discontent was prevalent and socialism was easily worked into the nation's economy. The advantages appeared to be many but when the workers found themselves working for an unseen leader and not for themselves this glow of enthusiasm was squelched. All industry now operates in the red, men skip work, production is slow. All enterprise is run by politics and not by good leaders.

This type of economy can and will disrupt the prosperity of any country on the face of the earth in a few short years. Never can men be forced to work efficiently; the best results will come when they work for their own profit. Russia, which for 30 years has used a type of slave labor, has shown no appreciable results in this direction.

We must not let anything similar to this come upon us. We must be alert and stay alert; not for today and tomorrow, but for all time. We owe this not only to ourselves but also to the other democratic countries of the world with whom we have an interdependence. It is our duty to be understanding and unselfish in our cause so that throughout eternity the United States will remain a symbol of hope for those who love peace and democracy.

VALEDICTORY

THE YEARS AHEAD

By Barbara Wintemberg

Mr. Kessler
Members of the Board of Education
Members of the Faculty
Parents and friends:

The time has come for the parting of the ways for the senior class of 1950. Some of us may obtain work in our home town or the close vicinity; others may leave for a number of years except for an occasional visit, but no matter what we do, we feel that we owe our success to the help and guidance of you—our faculty, parents, friends and neighbors.

From this night on, we realize that we can no longer depend on anyone else to solve our problems for us. Some of these problems may be big and some small, but whichever they are, our learning in this beautiful school will be a major factor in our final decisions.

The subject I have chosen for my speech tonight, and perhaps one of the more important problems confronting the country the effect of Socialism is by impossibly the best way to show the effect of Socializm is by informing you of some of the controversies facing Britain since she has adopted the Socialistic program.

After four years under a Socialist government, the British workman is beginning to wonder if all will be as rosy as the Socialists tell him. And well he may wonder, for although the war is over and peace is reigning throughout his world, he finds his life a continuous series of economic crises which hit him hardest where it hurts most—in the stomach. In spite of the fact that he is apparently making more money than ever before and has free medical service and free spectacles, he finds himself on a more monotonous and tasteless diet than even during the war years. Moreover, this diet is becoming more meager rather than improving.

He may point with pride to his cradle-to-the-grave security, his free medical and hospital service, and his free topees and false teeth (when he can get them.) He is beginning to realize, however, that these so-called free things are not free at all. He is paying for them through the nose—by payroll deductions, by excessive taxes, by his meager diet and by national sacrifices in building up the efficiency of his productive machine, on which his standard of living and security ultimately depends.

The British workman's doubts about socialism are further strengthened when he looks at the store windows lining the streets. While he is wearing drab "utility" clothes and shoes, he sees the stores full of high quality and finely styled suits, dresses and footwear, but these are not for him. These things are purposely taxed far beyond his pocketbook. He may consider the Labor party's socialist government as His government, put into power by himself and his fellow workers. Yet he is exhorted to work harder and longer, and not to ask for higher wages. He sees some of his fellow workers forcefully kept at jobs they wish to leave, and others told where they must work.

Britain today is certainly no monument to which the Socialists can point with pride. Socialism in Britain, on the other hand, is a timely warning and object lesson to anyone with eyes to see. It shows only too clearly what happens to a country's economy when it is governed by Socialist planners.

Granted that all Britain's woes are not the fault of the present Socialist government. However, the method of reviving the tight little isle, after suffering the ravages of two world wars and the loss of much of its empire, are contrary to all the laws of sound economics.

It follows then that Britain's very life depends upon the ability of its industries to produce goods and sell them at a profit in world markets. A sound British government, therefore, would do everything possible to encourage the most efficient operation of the British industrial machine. Anything to the contrary would ultimately have tragic consequences.

The Board of Trade has a life or death control over most industries. One of the most important functions of the Board is the setting of export "targets" for each company. This means that a manufacturer must export a certain percentage of his production. If he does not meet his export "target", his allocation of raw materials and possibly his fuel and power allotment is cut down. Thus, in order to make anything for the home market, a manufacturer must make sure he hits his export target.

By its complete control over the raw materials and the fuel and power that a plant may receive, the Board of Trade may quickly put a company out of business or reduce its output as the board sees fit.

One of the major gripes of the average Briton is the double standards of quality under which he is forced to live by the Socialists. The store windows are full of radios, television sets, fancy appliances, new automobiles, and nearly everything he would like to have. This paradox of meagerness in the face of apparent plenty is fostered on the Briton by the government planners by means of high purchase taxes. The purpose is twofold—to keep him from spending his money on what the planners consider to be luxuries and to force the manufacturers to stop making luxuries for the home market and make things for export.

Product research, the crux of a company's success in a competitive market, is encouraged by the government, at least in words. In actual practice, however, it is practically impossible for most manufacturers to develop and market new products. Manufacturers frustrated in this way can be found all over Britain. How they can be expected to build up world trade and compete successfully in world markets under these conditions is hard to explain.

The Socialist planners of Great Britain talk incessantly about the necessity for more production and harder work. They even talk about incentives, though what their idea of what an incentive for harder work is, only a Socialist planner can tell you. Their tax rates for both companies and individuals appear to be purposely designed to kill all incentives for harder work and improved efficiency. Under such a profit taxing policy it is surprising the number of British firms who are eager to expand and modernize. It speaks well for the inherent "toughness' of the British character. Even so, after a manufacturer has paid his company taxes and dividends, there is very little left of his profits for plant improvement.

Even more than with industry the British socialists seem intent on kicking all the incentive out of the British workman. He is extolled on all sides by posters, literature, radio and official speeches that he must work harder and longer and produce more. He is told that the future of Britain depends on his putting forth a greater effort. These pleas have long since fallen on deaf ears. The British workman everywhere, considers his paycheck as a measure of his work. And the paycheck of the British workman takes a terrific tax beating as soon as he begins making any money. So why work harder or longer, he asks?

What this crushing tax load does to the morale of the "brains' of British industry, is difficult to measure. As one executive expressed it, "The Socialist policy of weakening the strong to strengthen the weak will ultimately result in nothing but weakness."

Perhaps you are wondering what the Socialistic program of Britain has to do with us here in America. It is just this: America is gradually following the same Socialistic program which slowly overtook Great Britain only here in America we call it planned economy.

Government control over the power industries, of which the Tennesee Valley Authority is the largest entry, is only one of the many socialistic measures. The public has little conception of the extent to which our government has penetrated the electrical industry.

Our plan for socialized medicine is similar to that of Great Britain's. Under it all employers and their employees would be taxed at the payroll window for medical care. The proponents of this scheme had the effrontery to call it free medical care. Of course it is not. It will be paid for by taxes from everyone's pockets.

And for another thing, our government now has almost as complete a control over our private banking system as England has over its banks.

It is not possible to lay down a program in detail for checking and reversing our direction, and it is not necessary. What is necessary is to see clearly the general principles which must govern our effort. These I shall now attempt to enumerate as briefly as possible:

We must put human freedom as the first of our demands. There can be no security in a nation without freedom.

We must get rid of compromising leaders and not go one step more toward Socialism.

We must recognize that we are in a social war and that we must fight it as such.

We must put an end to the orgy of spending which is rapidly bankrupting the nation.

We must stop "planning" for Socialism and begin planning to make our free system of private

PRELIMINARL plans for the 1950 sessions of State Grange have been announced, and since some changes in scheduled dates will be in effect this year, it is none too soon to let you know so that you may make your plans accordingly.

As most members are aware, State Grange will be held the last week in October and the first two days of November, This was the decision of a majority of the delegates last December. This will be our 78th Annual Session, and with an estimated increase in membership, will undoubtedly set another record for attendance. We hope it will also find a large class taking the 6th Degree of Flora.

This degree will be conferred on Tuesday evening, October 31. Note the date, as it is changed from former years. Monday evening the Singing Contest will be held, Pomona Degree on Tuesday afternoon, and Juvenile degree Wednesday. The Service & Hospitalization Reception and Lecturer's Program will take place Wednesday evening. Thursday night the Agricultural and Technical Institutes will present their popular program. In between will be an outstanding group of interesting speakers, with the usual hard-working delegates taking care of general business of importance to all of us.

STATE FAIR Grange exhibits will be in the capable hands of Charles Riley again this year. State Fair Director Harold L. Creal, well known to farm folks throughout the state, has assured everyone that there will be increased emphasis on agricultural exhibits in the 1950 "Bigger and Better than ever" Fair. Everything from bees to pigions, and vast display of farm and garden and homemaking products will be seen. The cattle show, which attracted a record number of entries last year, is expected to be greater than ever before. Dates of the event will be September 2 through 9 inclusive.

enterprise operate at its fullest capacity.

We must rebuild in its integrity our republican system of government.

The task before us is clear. For our principles of action we must go back to our constitution, to our Declaration of Independence, to our history and to the example set by our national fathers. We must begin now to dismantle the tyrant state in America and to build up once again the energies of a free people.

We have our freedoms because we have followed the American Road which is the great and spectacular highway of freedom.

Is there any sense in turning off this American road and taking one that doubles back toward the starting point? Our forefathers left the British road long ago because of too much government and not enough individual opportunity.

We must never stray from the American road of free enterprise and free opportunity.
