Mr. Elwanger inquired the difference in value of tile and stone for graving. It was generally agreed that where stone are on the place, and are well laid on by a competent workman, they will fill up with small stones, covered with brush, straw, or sods so as to prevent dirt from working in and filling the joints, they are more economical than tile; but if both are to be bought, tile are the cheapest. We would say that in our country, the cost of properly laying stone, and filling up the joints, amounted to more than the cost of buying and laying the tile.
