Announcing the Opening of Two New Departments at DAVIE'S

It is with pride that we announce the opening of two entirely new departments designed to satisfy long felt needs of our customers.

The Bridal Shop

In this new shop the prospective bride will find a beautiful selection of bridal gowns, bridesmaids dresses, veils, gloves, etc. She will also be assured of the utmost privacy in trying on gowns.

The Tenn Hi Shop

This new shop is for girls of high school age who are too old for children's clothing, yet too small for clothes in the junior size range. Although the fixtures for this new department will not be received from Grand Rapids until next month, we are opening this shop this week with a complete line of wash dresses, sportswear, skirts, blouses, bathing suits, etc.

Both parents and daughters will be delighted with this new shop located on our second floor.

County Has Bond Quota of $160,000

George B. Rooth, Jr., Wellsville, chairman of the Allegany County United States Savings Bond Committee, announces that this county has been assigned a cash purchase price quota of $160,000 in Series "E" Bonds for the Independence Drive which opens May 15 and continues through July 17.

The Liberty Bell has been chosen as the symbol of the drive and the theme will be "Save for your Independence—Buy U. S. Savings Bonds."

"Allegany County has an unusual record in both wartime and peacetime bond drives," Mr. Rooth declared.

"We have never failed to meet a quota. This success has been due to the fine cooperation of our newspapers, our banks and all of our citizens."

Residents are urged to buy at least one additional bond during this period and to join a Payroll Savings Plan or a Bond-a-Month Plan which is offered at any bank.

"We realize that $160,000 in cash purchases is a large quota," Mr. Rooth said, "but I am certain our citizens will not only meet it—they will exceed it."

Lynn Gleason of Fillmore is vice chairman for the county and Rae Rowan of Wellsville is publicity director.

Allegany County Has First Muskrat Area in State

In January 1947 the first experimental muskrat marsh in New York state was developed by the Allegany County Soil Conservation District in cooperation with the New York State Conservation Department and the Soil Conservation Service, reports Robert A. Reed, district conservationist of the Soil Conservation Service at Belmont, on the farm of Lynn Watson, Belmont. This marsh, along with others now developed throughout the state, serves as an outdoor laboratory for testing various methods of marsh management. In addition it is a direct, on-the-land demonstration of the value of such areas.

The Watson marsh is two and one quarter acres in size. Of this area, about one acre is covered with water so deep that vegetation, such as cattails, will not grow. Of the remainder about one acre is covered by water so shallow that it freezes completely during the winter months. The area suitable for muskrats, one quarter acre, produces a luxuriant growth of cattails, the most important single muskrat food plant.

Muskrats represent the cash crop for such acres. The Watson marsh yielded nine this spring. These were worth approximately $22, not a large sum, but a substantial yield from an area which was wholly worthless prior to 1947.

As was mentioned above, a relatively small area sustained the muskrats during the critical period this winter. Studies made on this marsh and others by Art Cook of the State Conservation Department have shown how the marshes can be made to produce more cattail. And more important, how this production can be made available to the muskrats during the winter. For those of you who follow the Watson marsh the muskrat production in future years should be most promising.

Landowners are interested in cash crops. They are also vitally concerned with a supply of water for farm needs. The development of marsh areas such as that at the Watson farm should make possible an ample water supply the year around.

Sportsmen and landowners are interested in the game crop produced by these shallow water areas. Duck production has been outstanding to date. Pheasants, as every hunter knows, seek the protection of cattail stands to escape not only the rigors of winter but the hunter's gun as well. Much the same is true of the cottontail during the winter.

Trappers look at the program with mixed emotions. Some feel that the value of furs should not be publicized. Others feel that the production of a fur and game crop from an area where none were produced before is good conservation.

The first blast furnace to be erected in what was destined to become Pittsburgh, Pa., was built in 1792.
