History in the Making

For the past few weeks I have been wondering in my mind if anyone besides myself was interested in the notes I have been able to get together and hand in to Mr. Backus for his paper, or if I was wasting my time and his paper, and then I would meet someone who would say they were enjoying them very much. Then last week I received the following letter from one whom I have never had the pleasure of meeting, so I feel more than sure it was not written just to give me a lift in doing what I had set out to do.

Quote:

May 21, 1950
1357 Alexander St.,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Mrs. Mulconery:

In 1916 when I married and came to Grand Rapids to live, I was lonesome to say the least, so to ease the condition I thought of the Andover News. I have been taking it ever since.

Every week in the 30, 40 and 50 years ago, I noticed items about my father and also other members of my family, things or events rather I had forgotten. So I started a scrapbook. Now your "History in the Making" is very interesting and I thought that perhpas if you come across anything of interest in regard to my immediate family, you would send it to me.

I am saving your articles, they are both very interesting to both Mr, Lynch and myself and if I can ever be of any help to you, please call upon me.

Sincerely yours,
NELLIE LYNCH
(Mrs. Joseph P. Lynch)

Now I feel a big uplift in my work, for I feel sure I have made a new friend which I otherwise might never have had. I would also like to ask anyone who would have any articles pertaining to the relatives of Mrs. Joseph Lynch to contact me and let's help make a former resident happy.

Labor Day in 1910

Back on Labor Day in 1910 Andover had a great celebration. They had a very unusual parade. One thing in this parade was a float on which was a real printing press, and I have a paper that was printed and thrown off the float while en route. The paper was dated Sept. 4, 1960. Everything printed in this paper was pure imagination. For instance the first headline read, "Labor Day Celebration, 51st annual observance of the day in Andover, 10,000 people present, parade five miles long, review of the past."

As the "Daily News" goes to press today 10,000 people are in Andover in attendance at the annual Labor Day celebration in our City.

Are we slipping or were the people who set up this event a little over zealous? Well Labor Day in Andover hasn't been quite as big an affair of late as it was in the early thirties. Let's start thinking again about our old celebrations and bring back a lot of good fun we used to enjoy.

Here is a poem, printed in the same paper mentioned above:

Labor Day 100 Years Ago

A hundred years or so ago,
When Labor Day began,
Among the Allegany hills,
Then every child and man
Was roused up from his slumbers sweet,
To hear the roosters crow
And everyone was up and dressed
A hundred years ago.

They started out to till the soil,
With pick and spade and hoe,
They delved and dug and planted seed,
And watched to see it grow;
And then when kindly Nature shed
Her showers and sunshine glow
They garnered in their little store
A hundred years ago.

And when the winter days came on,
And wintry winds did blow,
They took a bag upon their back
And off to mill did go.
And when at night the meal came home,
The mush and milk did flow,
And then the babies all grew fat
A hundred years ago.

And if perchance they wanted meat
A woodchuck or a crow
Was slowly simmered in the pot
Until the evening's glow.

And then the hardy sons of toil
Would eat and from it grow,
And every day was Labor Day
A hundred years ago.

(Signed) Old Timer

After this little poem, it brings to my mind another fact brought out in a conversation with Mike Dougherty. He was telling me about the way the generations back were forced to grow their grain and when some had to be ground they would take a bag across their shoulders and start out over the hills to Dansville, N. Y., where the first grist mill was located. There were no roads or even well cut paths laid out then. They always carried a hatchet and would mark their path through the forests, get their grist ground and come back by the path which they had marked. Of course this was back when the first settlers had settled on South Hill.

John N. Thompson Gives Forestry Award

The John N. Thompson forestry award will be made annually in Allegany county to the individual making the greatest contribution to forestry, reports Robert A. Reed, district conservationist of the Soil Conservation Service assisting the Allegany County Soil Conservation District. The trophy, a 20 inch cup, donated by Mr. Thompson of Angelica will remain in the possession of the individual for one year or until a new winner is selected. A certificate will also be presented to the winner each year which will remain in his possession. The trophy will be passed around until an individual has been awarded possession three times, after which it will remain his permanent property.

Some of the work to be considered by the judges in selecting a winner will be his acceptance of a good forestry program for his property, including cooperation with the Forest Practice Act, the Allegany County Soil Conservation District, the Farm Bureau and the Production and Marketing Administration. Points will be awarded for reforestation work, the use of shrub borders, fire protection devices to eliminate the burning of forest lands and the use of water supply ponds. In addition other work in forestry activities such as attendance at field day meetings and demonstrations will help an individual boost his score.

The contest is open to anyone in Allegany county having done forestry work, reports Mr. Reed. For further details of the contest see John N. Thompson of Angelica, any member of the Farm Bureau Forestry Committee, the Forest Practice Board or contact your local Soil Conservation District Office in the court house, Belmont.

Paul Regan Urges Farmers to Buy Bonds

Independence in daily living has real meaning for farm families, say Paul C. Regan, Agricultural Chairman of the Allegany County Savings Bond Committee, in urging farm families of Allegany County to support the Savings Bond Independence Drive.

From the early days of America, farmers have largely relied on their own resources and initiative to make a living. Consequently, Regan pointed out, farmers appreciate and value their independence.

Some farmers are beginning to feel the squeeze between the lower farm prices and continued high operating costs, said Mr. Regan. To safeguard their farms and homes farmers are urged to keep on building adequate financial reserves by buying U. S. Savings Bonds.

Some farmers in Allegany county feel their reserves are big enough. They should make an inventory of the emergencies in modern farming for which financial reserves may be badly needed at any time, Regan remarked. In figuring reserve requirements, a farm family should keep in mind the greatly increased cash outlay necessary for current farm operations compared even to ten years ago, plus possible emergencies such as crop failures, accidents and sickness. Mr. Regan said, "The days of fixing things with baling wire and binding twine are gone forever."

If farmers want to retain a secure independence they must be sure their financial reserves are adequate. Series E, U. S. Savings Bonds, can provide these reserves. They can be purchased at any bank.

HEALTH FOR ALL

This column is sponsored, in the interest of better health, by the Allegany Health & Tuberculosis Association, 44 Schuyler St., Belmont, N. Y.

Rheumatic Fever

In the United States today there are approximately one million persons suffering from rheumatic fever. About half of them are children.

The acute stage of rheumatic fever is dangerous enough in itself, but even if the patient survives the first attack, it can damage the victim's heart for life, leaving him with a chronic illness known as rheumatic heart disease.

Although we do not yet know the specific cause of rheumatic fever, we know that it is a severe infection which strikes mostly at the body's connective tissue, the tissue which binds together and supports various structures of the body. Since the heart contains a great deal of this connective tissue, that organ's functioning is affected by even one slight attack of the rheumatic infection. Rheumatic fever, however, has a tendency to recur and, naturally, the more attacks, the more injury to a person's heart.

Rheumatic fever may attack at any age, but it begins most frequently between five and ten years of age. In terms of repeated attacks and chronic heart damage, the disease can "last" from nine to thirty years.

But while we may not know the exact cause of rheumatic fever, doctors have learned a great deal about how it acts. An attack or rheumatic fever, whether it be the first or a recurrent one, usually follows a sore throat, tonsillitis, or a cold.

Until very recent years, it was believed that the child who suffered an attack of rheumatic fever invariably remained a hopeless and helpless "heart invalid" for life. We know today that about two-thirds of the children who get rheumatic fever, will be able to lead moderately active, adult lives under the doctor's guidance and supervision, although there may be certain restrictions on physical exertion.

The earliest symptoms of rheumatic fever may include loss of appetite, loss of or failure to gain weight, fever, nosebleeds, a rapid heart beat, and pains in joints and muscles. If a child shows any of these symptoms, the doctor should be consulted immediately. If it is rheumatic fever, prompt medical care at the outset, plus medical checkups at intervals thereafter, can give the child his best chance both of survival and of growing up to lead a normal life.

Rheumatic fever seems to strike most frequently at those who suffer from malnutrition, exposure to damp and cold, extreme fatigue, and inadequate rest and sleep. The best known preventive measures against the disease, therefore, include steps to build the body's defenses against infection—with a well-balanced diet, fresh air, sunshine and sufficient rest—and the avoidance of fatigue, exposure and minor illnesses.

If rheumatic fever does attack, despite precautions, then the care and supervision of the doctor are of paramount importance to the patient's life and health. By closely following the doctor's advice as to his work and play, the patient has his best chance of leading a healthful and productive life.
