LOOK AT THAT REPORT CARD

By Dewalt Fowler

Joey, age 10, was going home from school. He took his time for in his pocket he carried a report card marked with red.

When he finally got home, his father demanded to see the card. Joey gave it up and watched timidly while his father scanned the marks. Then his father looked sternly at him and signed the card. "Son," he said, "You must do better than this, bring your books home after this and I'll help you."

This story shows one phase of the value of report cards which let parents know just how their children are doing in school, so they can help like Joey's father did. A report card also lets the student know where he stands.

There are some arguments against report cards. Many teachers say that a poor student looks at his red marks and thinks "Shucks what's the use, while others look at their high marks and decide to loaf the rest of the term.

Experience will tell many people how fast report card marks can drop when they get too self confident and loaf. But this editor believes that report cards are here to stay, for better or for worse. The students will keep bringing them home and the parents will continue signing them.

And who doesn't like to, now and then, look at his old report cards and remember his school days? He can then look at his son's and say to himself, "Just like his old dad!"

LET'S DANCE AND BE GAY

Because Friday evening, June 9, is drawing nearer and nearer, a happy reminder of the Cinderella Ball in the A. C. S. gymnasium should not fall on deaf ears.

An enjoyable evening of round dancing to Yale Jacobs and his orchestra should prove to be to the satisfaction of everyone concerned. But the real highlight of the evening will be the crowning of Cinderella from our own junior or senior class.

Who knowns, she may even be your daughter or your sister. In fact, she might be you!

HOMEMAKERS ATTEND CONFERENCE

There were more than 250 Future Homemakers of America in attendance at the State Conference held in Morrisville, N. Y., June 2, 3, and 4.

Miss Doris H. Zumsteg, known professionally as Jane Standish, consumer service director of General Baking Co., New York City, was the main speaker. Miss Zumsteg said that there were over 87 types of jobs available for homemakers. Some of them are food management, teaching, journalism, radio, television, home economics in business, extension work, education and promotional movies.

The new emblem service, similar to that used by the Future Farmers of America, was explained, after which the chapters receiving the awards were:

Windsor, Johnson City, Hancock, Newark Valley, Dryden Deposit, Bainbridge and Afton.

Following the general session in the afternoon the delegates and their leaders were guests at tea given by Dr. Vern A. Jackson, head of the division of home economics of M. A. T. I. and her staff.

For the first time in the five-year history of the state organization, three state homemakers degrees were awarded. Those receiving the degrees were Beverly Hayden, Fredonia; outgoing preident; Eleanore Fersching, Windsor, past first vice president and Mary Ann Neff, Johnson City, outgoing song leader. The degrees were awarded by Miss Dorothy S. Lawson, chief, bureau of home economics education, State Education Department, Albany.

The banquet held at the Morrisville-Eaton Central School at 6:45 p. m., on Saturday climaxed the conference.

Those attending from Andover were Miss Mary McCarthy, home economics instructor, Charity Howland, Joyce Linza, and Colleen McAndrew.

ROVING REPORTER

The question Roving Reporter is asking is "Whether or not you think stags should be allowed at the Cinderella Ball?"

Phyllis Burger: " Yes, we could use the money to help pay for the orchestra."

Carol Briggs: "No, who will they dance with if they come alone?"

Laura Croyle: "No, because they just sit around and don't dance."

Colleen McAndrews: "They will all come stag in that case."

Janice Hall: "I think so otherwise I would never get there."

Dale Green: "No, cause they wouldn't have any fun, only to interfere with other people."

Llye Slocum: "Yes, because it costs too much to take a girl."

Marie Kemp: "Well yes and no, some girls would rather go alone and some boys would enjoy the less expensive way, going alone. Going stag is the only way I'll get there."

Anna Beil: "No, I think the boys should take the girls because this way there isn't any cutting in all the time."

Lois Ruger: "No, definitely, wouldn't a girl look cute going to a formal dance alone?"

Aquinas Lynch: "No definitely not. It is just as cheap to bring a girl. It wouldn't hurt them to ask a girl."

Building or Remodeling Tips Offered

"When you plan a new house or remodel an old one, consider first the family's needs, says Dr. James E. Montgomery, associate professor of housing and design at Cornell.

"Most farm houses in the Northeast were built to meet the needs of yesterday's families," he points out. "Todays' families are smaller, and the activities carried on in the home are fewer than they were when the old houses were built."

Families planning a new or remodeled home should ask these questions, he says:

1. Have we considered all possible plans and arrangements? What is best for one family may not be best for another.

2. What kind of kitchen do we want? Where will we serve meals? Where will we do the washing, ironing, bookkeeping? Answers to these questions will help a family determine whether, for instance, the kitchen should be large or small.

3. Where will the children play mostly in their own rooms or throughout the house?

4. What do we have to store and where will we store it? Adequate storage space is an important part of house planning.

For families making house improvement, Dr. Montgomery notes, it is also necessary to consider which changes are most important and to give them first place in the plans.
