WANDERING with "WILLIE"

WE received the following shortie from our long-standing friend "Paddy" this week:

Dear "Willie":

As I am still in a weakened condition I'll have to make this short.

I just wanted to tell you that my memory is still active and I have a very clear picture of a certain character eating like a human pelican and drinking like a dehydrated goat—but enough of that.

The real purpose of this note is to submit for your approval, the name of "The Man With a Shovel" as our National champion liar for 1950.

Let me know what you think of this nomination.

"Paddy of the Patch"

Dear "Paddy":

We will also be brief this week due to the warm weather which has melted much of the wax out of our backbone so we nominate "The Man With a Shovel" as National champion liar of 1950. But you forgot also "Paddy" that they have not yet named the International liar, so that position remains open. Let's hope no one thinks of a candidate for that office.

"Willie"

Prisoner to the Bar

The justice of the peace, in pursuance of his duties, had to perform an occasional marriage ceremony. He found it difficult to dissociate the various functions of his office. Everything had gone smoothly until he asked one bride; "Do you take this man to be your husband?"

The bride nodded emphatically.

"And you, accused," said the justice, turning to the bridegroom, "what have you to say in your defense?"

Safe Picnics

Outdoor picnics are among the most popular summer diversions. Eating out-of-doors on a pleasant summer day seems to make the food taste better. Moreover, the picnic is a summer sport in which the entire family can participate, regardless of age or physical endurance.

Anyone would scoff at the idea that picnics can be unsanitary or downright dangerous. That's going to extremes. But, on the other hand, we must realize that the intrusion of ants and insects or a sudden rainstorm aren't the only things that might ruin the fun of picnicking.

The food supply is, of course, the most important part of any picnic. People who are ill should never prepare or serve the food because skin infections and other illnesses are easily spread through food. Foods which can spoil easily and thus cause illness should be kept out of the picnic basket.

While on the subject of food, it's unwise to "sample" the pretty but unfamiliar berries on trees and shrubs which grow in picnic areas. Most of these berries are harmless, but there are some poisonous ones which can do serious harm to the eaters.

Most people realize that it is dangerous to drink from unknown streams or brooks. But temptation might be strong to "take a chance" if the drinks run out during or after the picnic. It must be remembered that the most innocent looking streams can be contaminated by deadly germs. Drinking water should be brought from home unless there is a pure water supply in or around the picnic grounds.

It is often said that the best picnic grounds are always surrounded by poisonous plants. While this is not literally true, it's a good idea to watch out for ivy, oak or sumac before "setting the table."

Minor wounds—insect bites, cuts from bottle openers, scratches from brambles—seem to be a part of many picnics. No matter how small the scrape might be, it is wise to cleanse the affected area with a mild soap and apply an antiseptic salve or lotion, to prevent infection, as soon os possible.

For all serious "picnic accidents," or minor ones which might lead to complications, the doctor should be consulted immediately.

Summer picnics are designed for fun and relaxation. They always are (barring insects and rain) when participants use a little thought in preparing the food, selecting the spot, and guarding against accident and infection.

Attend F.H.A. Camp

Joan McAndrew, Maxine Baker and Calreci Nye spent the week of July 9-15 at Camp Oswegatchie, Croglar, N. Y., as delegates of the local chapter of Future Homemakers of America. There were 58 girls present from 24 chapters in New York State.

Leadership training, committee work on F.H.A. activities and recreation were included in the program.

Camp Oswegatchie is owned by the Future Farmers of America. This camp is located on Long Pond which is 79 miles north of Utica. This is the fourth year that Future Homemakers have attended the camp.

Miss Georgianna Marks, State F.H.A. adviser and Miss Kathleen Rhodes from the Bureau of Home Economics in Albany directed the camp. Miss Mary McCarthy, local F.H.A. adviser, accompanied the girls and was one of the six counselors at Camp Oswegatchie.

Work Bee at Fulmer Valley Cemetery

There will be an all-day work bee at the Fulmer Valley cemetery Sunday, July 30th, to continue the improvements, grading, etc., started last summer.

This half acre of land was established as a cemetery by the Fulmer family before the Civil War and is the resting place of many early pioneers and their descendants, including the Clarks, Stouts, Woods, Livermores, Fulmers, Densmores, Voorhees, Mingus, Adams, Graves, several veterans of the Civil War and many others.

Let's have a good attendance and express our appreciation and respect for the memory of these people to whom we owe so much. Several have no living descendants.

Home Snack Bar

Youngsters and grownups often like a snack besides regular meals. Make sure they get real food value in snacks by keeping a variety of foods in a special place.

The bottom shelf of the refrigerator and a low shelf in the cupboard are handy for storing snack foods. Stock up on peanut butter and other spreads, dried apricots, and cans of tomato and fruit juices for the cupboard shelf. In the refrigerator keep fresh fruit, carrots, or celery, and such things as hard-cooked eggs. These are good eating and easy to fix.

Self Defroster

A new attachment for refrigerators causes defrosting to take place automatically once a day. With one of these you can cross another job off your list of homemaking chores.

The attachment is a clockwise device that is plugged into the wall outlet; then the refrigerator is plugged into the attachment. You simply set the clock at the time you want the refrigerator to shut off—usually at night after meals are over. The clock turns off the refrigerator long enough for ice to melt from the freezing unit.

You'll probably need to wipe up melted ice now and then. And of course regular cleaning will be necessary as usual, but tedious sessions of defrosting are eliminated.

Arrange For Youngsters' Activity

Youngsters want plenty of activity to let off steam, so arrange your home and yard to give them a chance for "hard" play, say family life specialists at the New York State College of Home Economics, Cornell. This urge for activity is a real emotional need and makes children feel good.

Indoors, try to have floor coverings and furnishings that will take the wear and tear of little folks. Such things as metal ash trays instead of glass help because children like to handle things. Of course, you can't change all your furnishings to be "child-proof", but have as many sturdy things as possible. And try to provide one room that's especially suited for playing.

It helps if there's a roomy yard for running and jumping and climbing. And simple equipment such as a swing and packing boxes and boards will be welcomed by youngsters.

Moderate-Temperature Roasting

Keep the temperature moderate when you roast meat because high temperatures are likely to cause shrinkage and waste.

The recommended roasting temperature for most meat cuts that are cooked this way—beef, lamb, smoked pork, and veal—is 300 F. For fresh pork cuts, a slightly higher temperature is used; 350 F., is recommended for this meat.

During World War II, America's steel industry developed a special steel for G.I.'s helmets that could withstand a .45 caliber bullet fired at point blank range with a muzzle velocity of 725 feet per second.
