Farm and Dairy.

Edited and compiled by W. A. Ambrosius, of Batavia, Secretary of the State Grange.

Communications from farmers upon subjects relating to Agriculture will be cheerfully received.

The Anti-Secret Society Finds Children of Secrecy.

"Renovate. That we recognize in the Patrons of Husbandry or Grangers, so-called, which are springing up in all parts of our country, children of secrecy having Masonry and Odd-Fellowship, as god-fathers and god-mothers, which organizations are most cunningly designed to give speculators as head-centers the control of the farming interests of the country."

It is the Anti-Secret Society which recognized all this in solemn convention, assembled in Syracuse last week. It is very fortunate for the farming interests of the country as well as the anti-interest of Syracuse, that these children of secrecy have been brought to light. How well it accords with the eternal fitness of things, that the effulgent beams of light should radiate from Syracuse, where nature attempt'd to secrete in the bowels of the earth the savor of this mundane sphere, and where those children of secrecy have appointed to hold their next annual conclave, blissfully unconscious as they were then, that in this lovely month of June, corruscations of light from this city of the plains would reveal their secret origin and their final destination. Of course, after this revelation there will be no more children of secrecy, at least in enlightened Syracuse where things are done decently and in order, illumined always by the blaze of truth.

There is a little risk, it is true, in turning on so much light at once, revealing the occult processes by which these children of secrecy tend directly to the rapacious maws of head-centers and other ogres, but then there have been so many of these children coming through secret ways, deflecting farming interests injuriously, to say nothing of the anti interests regarding which the resolution is silent, that we are pleased by the presentation reported by our excellent brothers of the Anti-Secret Society.

We would, however, respectfully suggest that during the heated term now fully opened, nothing more be done to excite the public mind; regarding these children, trusting that on the arrival of the fall months the whole matter will be perfectly plain to the most obfuscated vision. We look forward to next January when the ripened fruits and fallen leaves of Autumn have given place to Winter's storm; when these Patrons of Husbandry or Grangers, so called, shall meet as appointed in Syracuse, each shall appear bearing a sprig of acacia to drop to the memory of our departed brothers of the Anti-Secret Society whose search for light led them to Syracuse, where lay the full fruition of their dearest hopes, and whence, let us trust, their labors in the farming interest over, they enter the more congenial fields of politics where no secrets will ever appear to disturb their calm repose. For, be it known, these worthy men, like many who have gone before them from Syracuse, have determined to make the next president. They have not left us in doubt as to whom he shall be, or at least as to what manner of man. He must be an American and have no affiliation with the children of secrecy.

In order to compass their plans these good brothers resolved to increase by one hundred thousand during the present year. Of course they will do it, having resolved, and then the farming interest saved from head centers, the next president as good as mad, this magnificent increase bespoken, what more remains to be done? We pause for a reply.

Dairymen find their chief profits in liberal feeding of their cows, supposing of course that there is richness and excellence in their manufactures. June generally brings a flush feed of grass so that no extra supply need be furnished, still there are some good dairies in which the cows throughout the season of milk, get daily grain feeds, and those men who practice this course seems to regard it as profitable.

Contrary to the observations and experiments of German chemists, there is with us a general belief that the richness of milk depends very much upon the character of the food given. There seems some argument in favor of the American idea in the fact that fresh grass feed creates a full flow of milk of which more is required to make a given amount of butter than when rich feed is given to the cows. No doubt it is profitable to feed corn meal right through the season whenever it can be cheaply furnished. It does not largely increase the flow of milk, but it does make an increase in the yield of butter, and what is of equal importance, it imparts excellent color, and now-a-days color is a very important matter when the product is put upon the market.

As corn sells now it would not be economical to feed it especially to make butter kept upon the June markets, but the question arises, is it wise to sell at present prices? Is it not always better to pack and take the fall prices? Speaking, of course, of makers who can put up so much that is worth holding. A small daily yield may better be sold than packed, because uniformity will not be found in the packages and whatever be the season the price, with this fault, will be small.

Butter return to its feed. As soon as the flies arrive in such numbers as to annoy the cows, whatever the grass may be, the yield of milk will shrink unless something more be furnished. Then is the time to put up the cows either for an hour or two and give a feed of coarse grain or for the night, and feed liberally with cut grass well wilted, and if there is some grain given with it so much the better. Stables and sleeping are contrived as to afford much protection from the cruel annoyance of flies and at the same time have adequate provision for ventilation.

It might possibly be better to stable in the day allowing a run in the pasture at night. Either way is a step towards selling which must sooner or later come into practice. The sole hindrance now is the great expense of labor, but when it is shown that the increase of product will justify, this expense need be no more a bugbear than the labor, nothing will come. The main thing to go upon, in the outset, is to get a good herd and have that as good all round as affordable.

Speculative.

There is fascination in any employment somewhat in proportion to the required exercise of mind in the effort to compass the uncertain elements and to turn them to profitable use. If the business of raising grain and grass and fruits could be subjected to fixed rules by which the desired measure of success should be assured, the charms of rural life would thereby be broken. All of us, in one way or another have adventure quite as well as we have profits, and often when we suppose ourselves in hot pursuit of gain, we are following the speculative instinct, discounting the pleasures, enjoyments and rewards which we believe lie at the end of the trail. Fixed rules to insure success in farming, would obviate the necessity of mental training, except such as would be necessary to produce exact mechanical action. However well we like money, most of us like quite as well the gratifying proof of the smartness which its acquisition gives. Happiness is the grand objective point of every worker, and they are few indeed to whom the mere possession of money brings even the semblance of happiness, although business success is mostly measured by the amount of nett cash products, perhaps because it is the easiest way of expressing a sentiment which can not be fully set forth in any form of speech.

Early in life we are impressed with the maxim—as ye sow in like manner shall ye reap. The uncertain element in the premises is at once the hope and the doubt of the harvest; and if we are wise it leads us to careful thought and study, and to the application of the truthful lessons gleaned from the fields of observation and experience, that we may reap in abundance the rewards which follow well directed efforts. Our main obligation rests entirely with the sowing. It is a matter of scope.—Farmers must give it full consideration or fail to realize expectations. They never sow wheat and reap clean unless the conditions of chess are the more fully met. Profits do not depend upon the moon, nor upon signs, nor whims, nor even upon luck. There is always a true way of performing all the operations of the farm, the difficulty being in distinguishing it from the thousand false ways. We must start right and keep right to make profits in farming.

After all it is not given to every one to see clearly the requirements, and those who do not and who thus bend under discouragements may better drop out of the ranks. There are many kinds of employment more certain to yield profits with far less of expenditure of thought. But for those who think as well as work there is encouragement whether their hopes be realized or if they be blasted, they are to treasure up the lessons learned by success or by failure, to renew their hopes in the future and, doubting that peace, plenty, and happiness will be meted to them just as they deserve.

Manures do not Leach Down.

Mr. Miller says "manure applied in a green state, and plowed under, and the greater portion of it remaining a number of inches below the surface nearly a year, much of this has gone too far down to benefit the next crop." Now, if the above theory is true, why is it that, on land that has been manured for thirty or forty years, the deeper we go down the poorer the soil? It seems to me that there must be a mine of manure underlying our farms, and that it is about time that we went down after it.

If this theory is true, how does he account for the fact, that when manure is plowed under on part of a lot, and the other part left without any manure, and the whole planted to corn, the corn on the manured part is much better than it is on the unmanured part, and that the oat crop following the corn will be greatly benefitted by the manure, and the clover will take better, and give a large yield of hay for several years?

In plowing corn stubble previously manured farmers generally plow one or two inches deeper than they did when they plowed under the manure, and I think this—on all ordinary soils—will bring up all the manurial elements not used by the corn. I do not think there is near as much danger of manures washing, covered up with soil as there is to leave them through the summer in the yard or manure shed liable to heat, and to evaporation.—[Am. Rural Home.

Mixing the Milk of Different Cows.

A discussion, at a recent dairymen's meeting, in regard to experiments in mingling the cream and milk of different breeds of cows, will doubtless be read with interest by Chautauqua and Cattaraugus dairymen. One of the members in giving some interesting details in regard to his experiments, said that he had found that the mixed milk from two breeds won d not produce as much butter as would the same milk churned separately. The explanation is in the attention in the sizes of the globules. When a large globuled milk and a small globuled milk are churned together the larger separate first into butter, and the breaking of the smaller globules appears to be retarded. When, therefore, a Jersey cow is kept in an Ayershire or Dutch herd for the purpose of influencing the color of the butter, the larger globules of the Jersey milk are broken first in the churn, and, while the smaller globules are being broken, the butte, which came first is being over-churned, and—theoretically, at least—the quality of the result is impaired, if not the quantity lessened. When a few Ayrshire or Dutch cows are kept in a herd of Jerseys and the milk churned together, both theoretically and practically, a large portion of the butter of the small globuled milk is left in the buttermilk in a state of globules. A like application may be made to herds of native or grade cows. Unless there is uniformity within certain limits in the milk globule there is a loss of product.—When uniformity is so seldom found in the external shapes of a grade or native herd, it is not probable that any greater uniformity exists between their functions.

If plaster aids the growth of corn it can very well be afforded, for the cost of application is very light. But there are many farmers who express doubts about any good results from its use. Let such settle the matter definitely so far as their own crops are concerned. Try a few rows with plaster, and leave a few without. The test will certainly be conclusive, and save more unsupported assertion, which in these matters proves nothing. In our own experience the use of plaster on corn proves beneficial, a conclusion which we have reached by repeated tests in the manner proposed. Any application which imparts vigor to the young plants is good, and if plaster will do this a very few days will furnish the evidence in the deeper color and ranker growth.

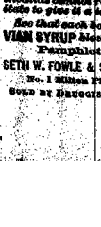
Ayer's
Sarsaparilla



Is widely known as one of the most effectual remedies ever discovered for cleansing the system and purifying the blood. It has stood the test of many years, and is generally growing in reputation, based on its intrinsic virtues, and sustained by its remarkable cures. So mild as to be safe and beneficial to children, and yet so searching as to effectually purge out the great corruptions of the blood, such as the scrofulous and syphilitic contamination. Impurities or diseases that have lurked in the system for years soon yield to this powerful antidote, and disappear. Hence its wonderful cures, many of which are publicly known, of Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Ulcers, Eruptions, and eruptive disorders of the skin, Tumors, Blotches, Boils, Pimples, Pustules, Sores, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, and internal Ulcerations of the Uterus, Stomach, and Liver. It also cures other complaints, to which it would not seem especially adapted, such as Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Fits, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Female Weakness, Debility, and Leucorrhœa, when they are manifestations of the scrofulous poison.

It is an excellent restorer of health and strength in the Spring. By renewing the appetite and vigor of the digestive organs, it dissipates the depression and listless languor of the season. Even where no disorder appears, people feel better, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. The system moves on with renewed vigor and a new lease of life.

Iron in the Blood
PERUVIAN IRON SYRUP
MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protoxide Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as it enters the blood, thus assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nutritious and Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and loosing nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by correspondingly depressing, but are permanent, lasting strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.
